The people of Boone would like to hear Hon. John G. Carlisle explain why he is opposed to the Blair Educational bill. A very opportune time for a speech on that subject will be the first Monday in September, which is County Court day. Come out that day Mr. Carlisle, but you need not confine your remarks entirely to the Educational bill.

The officers have brought about a compromise of the Rowan county war, and by the terms thereof Craig Toliver is to go to Missouri, and Cook Humphries, to Texas. It is to be hoped that the change of scene and water will have a good effect on the two unworthies, but the States to which they go should notify them immediately upon their arrival that they have a militia to look after them if necessary.

Just what is going to be the final result of the trouble with Mexico over editor Cutting can not be told. Texas is "spilin'" for a fight, and she may take upon herself the responsibility of redressing Cutting's wrongs. The Department at Washington does not seem to be very greatly excited over the affair, and it is evident that Secretary Bayard does not intend to have a fight over the matter if it can be honorably avoided.

Whenever [illegible] politicians will often hear such complaints as the following which we copy from the Rising Sun Recorder:

"Hon. John R. Craven in his speech as presiding officer of the Jefferson county Democratic convention at Madison Saturday urged the selection of good men for the offices to be filled. He deemed the fact that charges were against the election of the nominees of the convention no excuse for selecting incompetent men. The people were tired of going to the polls and casting their ballots for the incompetent and perhaps dishonest nominees of conventions in which trickery and corruption predominate."

Mr. H. J. Foster, County Superintendent of Schools furnishes us with the following bit of information which is of especial interest to the teachers and patrons of public schools: The white per capita and the colored per capita for the school year 1886–7 will each be $1 65. The white per capita of $1 65 does not include the interest on the county bonds. The total white census for the year 1886–7 is 538,963, being an increase of 14,695 children over the last preceding census. The colored census is 102,847, and increase of 3,183, making a total increase of 17,878, while the total number of children—both white and colored—in the State is 641,802.

Those of our readers who suppose that Mormonism is confined to Salt Lake City and Utah are very much mistaken. The great mass of the Mormon population, which is about two hundred and fifty thousand, exists beyond the border line of Utah. The Latter Day Saints have been for some time swarming up into Idaho, where they are at present a political power. Most of the southern counties of Idaho are controlled by Mormons, but recent indictments against them at Blackfoot leave the impression that the respectable portion of the community means business, and intend, if possible, to stamp out the vice. Notwithstanding the crusade against them in that Territory, a noiseless exodus of Mormons from Utah to Oneida county, Idaho, has been going on quietly for some time. There are thirty Mormon churches in Colorado, forty in Oregon, sixty in Arizona and seventy in Idaho.

A dispatch from Louisville says: "There is to be an election investigation here within the next two days that will cause a greater sensation in local politics than anything else for the last ten years. It is claimed that there is proof that the faction representing Newman, candidate for clerk of the County Court, made offers to bribe officers of election to falsify the vote by recording the votes cast for Webb in the Newman column. Active and reliable men who were present at the Second Precinct polls of the Eleventh Ward are ready to swear that Webb votes were regularly recorded for Newman. In two cases the fraud was discovered and the clerk required to change the vote. It is claimed that votes were vigorously stolen at other precincts, and the names of a number who voted for Webb, but whose votes were recorded for Newman, have been obtained and the comparison will be faithfully made to get at the facts. Mr. Joseph Baker, a book-keeper and a man of excellent business standing, will make affidavit that he voted for Webb at the Second Precinct of the Eleventh Ward, and that his vote was recorded for Newman, as the poll-books have since shown. It is said that similar affidavits will be made by other reliable men, and in all probability the investigation will end in a criminal prosecution.

On Saturday before the regular August election, Henry county voted on local option, and the following is a portion of the Constitutionalist's account of the election:

"Saturday was a busy day in Eminence, the friends of local option made things lively by their active work among the colored people. When the battle was over the proclamation was fully made that the 'colored troops fought bravely.' Whenever a colored man voted for prohibition a badge, bearing the words, 'against whisky,' and a booming cannon with the American flag unfurled above it all printed in blood-red ink, with a piece of blue ribbon, was immediately pinned on his breast. He was then admitted to Helm Hall, where the temperance ladies fed him lavishly on ice-cream and cake. As these badges grew in number their influence became quite perceptible, and of about one hundred and ten colored voters in the precinct, seventy five voted for prohibition. One or [illegible] which took an active part and worked with a degree of vigor and energy almost unexampled, securing many votes for prohibition that might otherwise have been cast for whisky. STATE NEWS.

Old corn is selling at Midway at $2 per barrel.

Tobacco crop shorter than for years in Robertson.

Over 1000 persons in and around Owensboro signed the temperance pledge.

The outlook for a good corn crop in Bourbon this season is very promising.

The illness of Colonel Thomas L. Jones is said to be softening of the brain.

There were 15,000 acres of wheat in Clark county, which will average at least 20 bushels to the acre.

The people of Washington county voted $30,000 tax to aid in extending the Bardstown branch of the L. & N. from Bardstown to Springfield, by a vote of 1200 to 100.

The State Board of Equalization fixed upon $40 as the cash average value of land in Scott county. Nine per cent. was added to the valuation of land and 40 per cent. to personalty.

Last Tuesday morning about 10 o'clock Mr. Wm. H. Huston had 13 stacks of hay burned to the ground. It is thought that a certain party stuck a match to one of the stacks on purpose.—Standard.

Henry Powell sowed last fall on some tobacco ground two and two-third bushels of rye, and threshed this year from what he cut forty-four bushels. About one-third was too much injured to cut. Who can beat it?—Corinth Enterprise.

It may not be believed by people of this section of the State, but it is true that the counties of Clay, Laurel, Lee and several other counties between here and the Cumberland Gap, are raising good crops of cotton, and have been for years, which are generally used for home consumption.—Bourbon News.

The railroad and politics and all other questions are subordinate to the bee question, in Rising Sun. The council is asked to prohibit by ordinance the keeping of bees within the city. Remonstrance is made against such action. The feeling but, "To bee or not to bee" is the question.—Recorder.

Robt. C. Jones, of Mt. Sterling, has filed suit in the Montgomery Circuit Court against J. M. Bigstaff, the well known shorthorn man, for $50,000 damages for slander, and a suit for $5,000 against the Traders Deposit Bank, Mt. Sterling, for refusing to honor his check, when he had a balance to his credit.

The corn crop in this county promises well, but the acreage is not large. A trader who has been through Garrard, Lincoln and Mercer the past week tells us that there is a good deal of short corn in these counties, particularly the first two named. He thinks the market here will open at about $2, which estimate we think is 40 cents too high.—Harrodsburg Democrat.

When it comes to match-making Carrollton can't be beat. There are a few here who have a mania for the business and are not happy unless they are making a match between some man and some woman. They operate mainly among middle aged and old people, but will not refuse to lend a helping hand to the young. Their services are given without money and without price—all for the pure and unadulterated pleasure it gives them.—Democrat.

A young man from Georgetown went to High bridge, and while there slipped off to the river and took a swim. A dudish cuss passed along and cut the legs of his pants off above the knees. The young man came out, and discovered his predicament. After dressing, he skipped to a thick patch of woods near the depot, until train time, when he sneaked into a "private box" of the rear coach, where he remained until he arrived at Georgetown.—Lexington Drummer.

The next Supreme Court bench will be composed of Judge Bowden from the First District, Judge Holt from the Second District and Judge Ward from the Third District—Judge [illegible] only [illegible] of the old bench retiring.

Ex-Governor James B. McCreary was unanimously renominated for Congress from the Eighth district by the Danville convention. The nomination is equivalent to an election. McCreary has made a very acceptable Representative in Congress.

D. S. Nixon, a defeated candidate for Jailer of Bath county, has brought suit for damages in the sum of $20,000 against A. L. Wright, of the same county, who, he alleges, made use of certain malicious words against him during his canvass which resulted in his defeat.

The fatal casualties of election day foot up as follows so far as reported: In Nicholas county Stanton Bannister killed Hal Galvin in an election row; in Henderson county T. M. Mitchell killed Evans Gibson, in Washington county Charles Van Cleve, col'd., was killed by Tom Conway Deputy Marshal. A young man named John Noble was shot and instantly killed in Meade county. His slayer was Jas. France, and the shooting took place at Allen's precinct, just opposite Leavenworth, Ind.—Louisville Times.

Happy is the lot of W. C. P. Breckinridge. He was sent to Congress two years ago without opposition. His canvass did not cost him a dollar. And now he is a candidate for re-election, and the newspapers of his district say there will again be none to oppose him. It must be pleasant as well as profitable to go to Congress from the Ashland district. Down this way a candidate has to spend from $2,500 to $3,500 to secure a nomination, and before he reaches his seat in the House he has opposition for the next term.—Owensboro Messenger.

ROUGH FEED NEEDED.

The Only System of Feeding Which Insures Complete Digestion.

All domestic animals need rough feed, or "stover," mixed along with the fine food, hogs as well as the rest. In the case of the ruminating animals, it is doubtful if grain or meal fed alone goes to the first stomach at all. A large majority of the experiments made to determine this point, clearly show that fine foods do not, to any material extent, go to the first stomach when fed to cattle alone; and if food does not go to the first stomach, it can be only very imperfectly digested, since it escapes the macerating process of the rumen and being remasticated and mixed with the saliva. How true this is every large feeder of cattle, in the West at least, must know. A large proportion of the kernels of corn eaten by the animals is found in their droppings, some whole, others broken, but all indigested. If they had passed into the first stomach they would have been raised and remasticated, and certainly would not have escaped this process scarcely broken. So it is when meal is fed. It passes into the third and fourth stomachs, a mass of dough, into which the gastric juices can not penetrate. It is true that the muscular contractions of the stomach will give a gentle motion to the dough; but this will make it more compact rather than of a character that the gastric juice can operate freely upon it. If, however, we mix this meal with cut straw or hay, the mixture will go to the first stomach, and will, of course, be remasticated, while the bits of straw or hay will allow the gastric juice to circulate through the mass and insure complete digestion.—Washington Post.

WATCH THE COLONIES.

Serious Mistakes in Bee-Keeping Which Can Easily be Avoided.

Bees quickly detect individuals who are strangers, being, no doubt, guided by scent, and they also have a repugnance to articles that have been painted, greased, or in any manner rendered of a disagreeable odor. The new hives, therefore, should be as clean as possible, and free from any taint of impurity. They should not be painted, nor should any thing be placed in them but a small quantity of sugar or pure syrup. The bees will carefully clean the hives after they take possession, and will keep them in good condition. It is very easy to make mistakes in bee-keeping, and they should be avoided as much as possible. Do not waste the comb. If the combs are gradually returned to the hives the bees will give them a thorough cleaning and utilize them, thereby saving a vast amount of labor that would otherwise be devoted to the production of honey, and extra combs should always be on hand for the use of new swarms. If a colony leaves the hive late in the season, when the harvest of honey is nearly over, the bees will have an arduous task to perform, if they are compelled to make both comb and honey. All hives should be covered in order to protect them from the rays of the sun and from dampness. One of the essentials in bee-keeping is a dry hive. Dampness is more injurious than cold and the mistake of not properly protecting the hive may entail loss. Keep a watch over the colonies, and avoid the mistake of being compelled to make or procure a hive just about the time the swarming is to occur. Have every thing in readiness, so as to locate the new colony as soon as possible.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

UNLUCKY INVENTORS.

But Few of Them Endowed With the Money-Making Sense.

"Do inventors generally make money out of patents?" I asked a gentleman connected with the Patent Office the other day.

"No, as a rule the money is made by people who buy or swindle the inventors out of their rights. Inventors are nearly always poor men. They work their brains for their bread and butter. They are a visionary set of fellows and have not the money-making sense. They get in with business men in order to develop these patents, and these rockets them out of the profits. The man who invented the elevated railroad in New York died a poor man, and while he was alive the people laughed at him. It is so with hundreds of other patents, and if you will look over the history of the Patent Office you will find it is the business men who make the money, while the inventors do the work. Some patent lawyers make a great deal of money, and there are a number in Washington who have grown wealthy in the practice. There is a man here named Pollock who has made a fortune in the patent law. He had something to do with the Goodyear rubber patent, and he has been prospering ever since. He owns a fine mansion on the corner of Seventeenth and I streets, and tried the experiment one time of making a stable for his horses in the basement. All the modern improvements, however, in the shape of water would not do away with the smell, and he finally gave it up as a bad job. Many patent lawyers, when they see that a man has a good thing, contract with him to get out his patent for a certain amount of money and some shares in the stock of the patent. They get paid for their work with the money and have a fair chance of making a fortune out of the profits of the patent if it turns out well. There are hundreds of patent lawyers in Washington. Many of them are smart fellows and all of them are making money.

"A great many inventors devote themselves solely to making patents for kitchen utensils, and others work upon machines relating entirely to water. A great many of the railroads and machine shops and factories of various kinds keep inventors who do nothing else but work upon the specialties of the factories in which they are employed. Women make a great many patents, but these deal chiefly with household matters or with their own work. There has been a great deal of electrical invention during the past few years, and it is perfectly wonderful how rapidly the patents come in after any success in any particular branch of invention. A great accident always brings in patents to prevent its occurence in the future, and when a big fire occurs at any of the big hotels with a great loss of life the fire escapes roll in by the hundreds."

"Have you many patents for perpetual motion?"

"Yes, hundreds are applied for, but they are not granted. I remember once a man walked from Kentucky to Washington to patent a perpetual motion, and one of your Ohio newspaper men, not long ago, telegraphed to the Associated Press that the invention of a perpetual motion had at last been conceived somewhere in Ohio. I should think that Washington would be a good place for an inventor to work. By going to the Patent Office he could see all that had already been done in the line upon which he was working, and he might see where a cog here or a wheel there would perfect some patent which would then be worth tens of thousands of dollars where it is now worth nothing."—Carp, in Cleveland Leader.

A VISIT TO PASTEUR.

The French Savant Energetically Defends His Inoculation Theory.

Dr. G. H. Brandt writes concerning a visit he paid to Pasteur: "Nothing can exceed the politeness and kindness of M. Pasteur in explaining and answering our numerous questions. He is completely wrapped up in his subject, and, contrary to what has been hinted by some authors, keeps nothing hidden from any one. He generally finishes by saying: 'Gentlemen, I have told you everything I know, you have seen all I do, and now you know as much as I do.' As we were questioning him, a paper was shown him in which there was a paragraph which said: 'We can place no reliance on M. Pasteur's work, as so many cases of rabies appear many months—eighteen, twenty and even twenty-four—after the bite of a mad dog.' To this M. Pasteur answers: 'This is not good reasoning, for statistics show that the great majority of cases have an incubation period of from twenty to sixty days. Cases of rabies happening before the twentieth day are very rare, and those after the sixtieth day are still more rare, so that our treatment includes the majority of cases. Six months have elapsed since young Meister was bitten by a mad dog and treated by my system; he is alive and well. So that it is not fair to condemn a treatment because time has not allowed the extremely rare cases of long incubation to show the result of our treatment. Statistics also show that there are about fifteen cases annually of hydrophobia admitted into the Paris hospitals, followed by fifteen deaths. Since we have begun our treatment there has been only one case admitted; this case was not inoculated, and death was the result.' To the unbelievers M. Pasteur says: 'Wait; time will reveal many facts connected with this question: and it is only by continued experiments and constant observations, carried on for a considerable time on hundreds of cases, that we shall be able to arrive at positive and definite results. It is satisfactory to know that no evil results have followed the numerous inoculations already made. Several of M. Pasteur's students have inoculated themselves with attenuated virus, and, barring a slight red areola formed over the seat of puncture, no unpleasant symptom has ever shown itself."—N. Y. Evening Post.

The real estate of Ohio county, after the State Board added 5 per cent. to it now stands valued at $12.99 per acre. In 1885 it stood at $17.79 per acre. It will be noticed that the valuation is reduced almost one-third. Dearborn Ripley and Switzerland show much less reduction than Ohio county. The number of polls in Ohio county is put at 733. The total value is placed at $1,395,515.—Rising Sun Recorder.

Last Friday Esquires Gaines and Baker alternated in the disposal of the several trials of parties from Constance. Dr. Murat and wife and Fred Probbie's family were the offending parties and warrants were numerous, and it all resulted in Fred Probbie being bound over to keep the peace. A car load of witnesses were on hand to testify pro and con, but many of them returned home without having detailed the sensational facts known to them.

When Mr. A. G. Winston laid the corner stone for the addition to his palatial residence near Hebron, he placed beneath it a tyle in which was secured a letter containing a complete history of the property as to when the original and addition was built, by whom built and by whom occupied, a copy of the Cincinnati Daily Enquirer and Commercial-Gazette and last but not least a copy of the Boone County RECORDER, which last named paper will enable the building to withstand many storms, and if taken out a hundred years hence will find but few who read the items in the edition of which it was one.

John Irvin Bruce was born [illegible] 1851 and died at his home near this place early last Saturday morning. His remains were interred in the Burlington cemetery the following day. Born and died—what a short record! and yet, alas! it is about all that can be written about most of us; but we may say of him, that an honest man and a faithful friend has passed from us into the shadows of another world. He has left a devoted wife, two lovely children and numerous relatives to mourn his loss.

Death came to him in fearful might—
He suffered—and is still
May the bereaved learn in the Light

USEFUL AND SUGGESTIVE.

A man may have the best known breed of fowls, and if they are not properly cared for they will not give satisfaction.—N. A. Farmer.

Cream Pie. Beat one egg with a small half cup of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one cup creamy milk and one teaspoonful of lemon extract.—Boston Globe.

Wm. Falconer, in the Country Gentleman, says that parsnips, salsify and scorzonera are more apt to grow forked when planted on freshly manured soil.

It is said that the best mode of using sulphur about plants, in order to destroy insects, is to sprinkle it on the ground during a warm day, when it will prove beneficial without injuring the plants.—Troy Times.

—One gives the body up to sleep with a fuller sense of rest, a deeper sweetness, if the last look around the rooms, bed-candle in hand, has shown every object in its right place and its best condition, all well-ordered, comfortable and beautiful.—Montreal Witness.

—Leaves are to plants what lungs are to animals—the organs of respiration. An animal can not grow, nor long continue to live, without the aid of lungs. A vegetable can not grow without the aid of the leaves, nor continue to live if wholly divested of them during the season of growth.—Albany Journal.

—If your hogs begin to cough, look out for malignant lung troubles. If they mope and lie about their beds, intestinal difficulties may be suspected. Plenty of pure air, pure water, and varied food will scare away malignant diseases. How many farmers pay proper attention to the condition of their hogs and where they are kept?—Western Rural.

—Date Sauce: Date sauce, which is very nice with bread puddings, is made by stewing dates in just enough water to cover them; let them simmer for three-quarters of an hour, then if the dates are soft rub them through a colander, beat it until it is light, add water if it is needed to thin it, let it come to a boil. If you have saved the juice of fruit when canning it, use this instead of water to thin the sauce. The juice of currants is especially appetizing.—Boston Budget.

—Save the small roots of horse-radish for planting. They should be cut into pieces about three inches long, cutting the top end square across and the bottom slanting, in order to know which is the top end when planting. It is not advisable to plant the crowns of the plant, as they will only produce a mass of small roots that are not available for use, except for cutting to plant. —Exchange.

—The Husbandman says a barn sheet is something which ought to be found on every farm, but seldom is. It is simply a large sheet of heavy cotton sheeting, sixteen yards being sufficient to make a good-sized one, to be spread on the wagon bottom when buckwheat, oats, or wheat which is too ripe, are being drawn in. The saving of shelled grain, which would otherwise be lost, is not inconsiderable. It serves another purpose also, as it may be spread over an unfinished stack during a sudden storm, or over a load of grain in bags in the field or on the way to town.

—Economy in the kitchen ought to be the first principle in housekeeping. The wife who is too stuck up to look after the eating department, little knows how many dollars she can save out of her housekeeping money for herself. When I see Ethel with new gloves and shoes, without asking me to plunge my hand in my pocket, I know that she, being housekeeper, has been "on the save." "Where did you get the gloves, Ethel?" "Nipped the money out of the house," I get for a reply. Consequently I call this "nip" money. Any sensible, careful woman can "nip" and yet provide well.—Waverley Magazine.

PUMPKIN SEEDS.

The Peculiar Properties of the Seeds and their Value as a Food.

One effect of pumpkin seeds is their action upon the kidneys. They are given as a diuretic medicine, as stated by Wood & Bache in their Dispensatory, and also used to expel tape-worm.

Those who have watched their effect upon milch cows, believe that this action upon the kidneys reduces their yield of milk. And this is certainly the natural effect that extra action of the kidneys must have upon the secretion of milk. Strong action like this must also unfavorably affect fattening animals—hogs or cattle. Pumpelly, in his work "Across America and Asia," says the Chinese eat pumpkin seeds between the courses at dinner. This may be as an appetizer or digester.

These seeds are rich in nitrogen and oil. They are certainly very nutritious, and cattle and hogs are often eager to eat them. Some feeders of swine have been very successful in feeding pumpkins as a large part of the ration in fattening them. Experience seems to have been contradictory on this matter, but the explanation is simply this: The seeds in small quantity are not deleterious to animals in good health, but when it happens in breaking or cutting up pumpkins that the seeds get separated from the body of the pumpkin, and these accumulated seeds are thrown to the animals in a mass, and an extra quantity is eaten by a few, it produces a bad effect.

It is to be presumed that if hogs or young cattle eat only the common proportion of seeds—that is, if it eats a pumpkin and the seeds that belong to it, no harm will be done, unless the pig or steer is in an unhealthy condition. But as the seeds are so liable to get separated from the body of the pumpkin, it is safer to separate them, and if fed, give them in very small quantity. It is the seeds alone that act deleteriously upon the kidneys.

The pumpkin is a profitable crop to raise for feeding all the animals on the farm. Two to three tons per acre may be raised with very little labor in the corn field, and the food value per ton is greater than the best corn fodder. But it is not advisable to feed the seeds to milch cows—the danger is greater than the advantage.—Prof. Stewart, in Country Gentleman.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE
ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, whose disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.
NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. Schwartz & Haslett, Pittsburg, Pa., Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family. Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.
CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. M. HANDY, M. D.

HIS WILL WAS STRONG.

Thus General Beale Was Saved from Hydrophobia.

He Relates How He Defended Himself from an Attack of Rabies—A Dramatic Story Told of His Daughter and Son-in-Law.

General Beale is visiting the Grants at their cottage at this place. Last Sunday I heard the General give an interesting account of his once fighting off an attack of hydrophobia. It is the first case I ever heard of a man's being able by mere will power to throw off this formidable and terrible disease. The General apparently believes that hydrophobia is but a creation to a certain extent of the imagination. When he was a young man he was Surveyor-General in Southern California. During his residence there, through the purchase of land, he laid the foundation for his present fortune. His favorite sport at at that time was the hunting of wolves. The hunters would go out armed with lances and follow trained dogs. The dogs would run down the wolves. Immediately following the attack one wolf would always leave the dogs and come to attack the hunter. The General said one day when a wolf came toward him the lance, with which he could easily keep off and destroy any wolf making any ordinary attack, broke. As his lance broke he started to kick the wolf under the jaw. His foot missed its aim and instead was caught in the wolf's mouth. The wolf bit clear through his moccasin and wounded him severely. So grim was the grip of the wolf that he did not even release his hold when killed. The muscles supporting his jaws had to be cut before his teeth would relax from this terrible grip. When the General returned to camp, as he was alone during this experience, he was met by a cheerful companion, who told him that the bite of an enraged wolf was certain to produce hydrophobia. The wolf was undoubtedly in a condition to communicate the rabies, as he had been worried to a great extent by the dogs before he attacked the General. General Beale says that he did not have any opportunity of cauterizing the wounds, and had attached no particular importance to the bite until he had returned to camp.

He said after that there was hardly a day passed but what his companion referred to cases of hydrophobia arising from wolf bites. The result of this continued talk upon the subject was to produce a great depression in General Beale's mind. Within a short time he began to feel symptoms of an approaching attack of hydrophobia. He had the most extraordinary aversion to water. It was with difficulty that he could swallow. A swelling came in his throat which threatened to close it whenever he sought to drink. It was only by an extraordinary effort of the will that he could force himself to swallow. One day the General said to himself that unless he combated this growing feeling he felt certain he would have an attack of hydrophobia. So one morning he walked deliberately to a spring and thrust his head into the water. He said as he approached his head to the water he felt the most intense desire to jump and scream and run away from it. But he held himself right there and moved his head up and down in the water until he conquered this impulse and the aversion. He followed up this practice until he felt the swelling in the throat going down and his aversion to water lessening. He felt that he was getting control and this encouraged him. In a short time all symptoms of the disease had disappeared. The General was firmly convinced that if he had for one moment relaxed his will power during that trying time he would have passed directly into a fit of the wildest kind of hydrophobia. He has never suffered from the bite of the wolf since that time, although it occured over twenty-five years ago.

It is a singular fact in this connection that another member of his family who has been bitten by a dog which was undeniably mad had also escaped hydrophobia. His daughter Mary married a distinguished Russian, a member of the diplomatic service of his native country. Several years ago they were living in Paris. The husband was connected with the Russian legation. General Beale's daughter had at that time a stag-hound of unusual size and purity of breed. It was very docile and her favorite companion. He nearly always went out with her. One day the dog disappeared. As he was a great pet and a dog of unusual value they advertised for him, and sought through the police to recover him. One night when the Russian diplomate and his wife were seated about an open fire in their salon after returning from the opera there was a knock at the door. This was so unusual at this late hour of the night that the Russian went himself to answer the knock. As the door opened two men entered having the lost dog attached to a stout stick, which held him between them but yet kept them at a safe distance. General Beale's son-in-law was delighted to see the dog again. The dog's mistress was specially pleased. The dog, however, showed no sign of pleasure or recognition. He went over into an opposite corner and would not pay any attention to their calls. They thought that he might feel strange and so paid no further attention to him. Suddenly, without even a bark of warning, this great dog sprang and bit his mistress right through the upper lip and then on her cheek before her husband could reach the stout collar which still encircled the dog's neck. The Russian succeeded in half a moment in dragging the dog off from his mistress and then he had a terrific fight with the infuriated animal. If he had not been very muscular he would not have succeeded in subduing him. He succeeded finally in dragging him into a bath-room and locking him up, but not until his right arm was bitten and torn from shoulder to wrist.

The scene that followed is dramatic enough for the most sensational of plays. The moment the door was locked the Russian returned. He glanced quickly at the fireplace, where he saw the poker was imbedded in the coals and was, fortunately, nearly at a white heat. He drew it at once from its bed and said to his wife: "The dog is mad. This is our only chance to escape a horrible death. These wounds must be cauterized at once." The brave American wife never flinched. With the courage of her soldier father she submitted to have the flaming iron burn most cruelly the flesh of her fair face. A moment's delay upon her part or cowardice would have made the operation upon her husband's arm useless. The moment after cauterizing her wounds the Russian turned to his own arm and thoroughly burned every break made in his flesh by the dog. After this had been done as completely as possible they sent for the surgeon of the Russian legation. He was one of the finest surgeons in Europe. He came and examined them. He brought his irons to perform the operation of cauterizing, but he said after he came that he had nothing to do. The young Russian diplomate had performed the work as well as if he had been a skillful surgeon. The surgeon also added that there was no danger.

The dog was undoubtedly mad. It tore every thing to pieces in the room where it was confined and died in horrible agony. General Beale says that neither his daughter nor her husband have felt the slightest symptoms of trouble resulting from this accident. He says his daughter determined from the first that she would not allow her mind to dwell upon it. She remembered how her father had courageously fought off hydrophobia, and she was fully resolved that no mental disturbance or worry upon her part should throw open the gate to the approach of this terrible disease. General Beale did not mean to say that there was no such thing as real hydrophobia upon the part of human beings, but he sincerely believes that in the majority of cases it results largely from fright and mental depression.—Long Branch Cor. N. Y. World.

NURSERY NAMES.

Silly Girl Graduates Who Permit Themselves to Be Called by Baby Names.

Hallie, Bessie and Mamie were the Christian names given by three of the nine young women upon whom the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Letters were conferred at the commencement of Rutgers Female College.

Of course it is of no use to expostulate with these girls for allowing themselves to be described by their pet nursery names even in so formal a document as a college diploma. We might as well attempt to reason them out of obedience to the dictates of a passing fashion in dress—to induce them to reduce the height of their hats or the heels of their boots. They prefer their own taste to ours, and think that Hattie, Bessie and Mamie are much prettier and far more elegant names than the homely, old-fashioned Harriet, Elizabeth and Mary.

None the less, it seems very incongruous, and it is very incongruous to give a scholastic degree to a young woman who is spoken of only as if she were a baby who had not yet mastered the pronunciation of some of the consonants, and who changed the construction of words to suit the limitations of her infantile vocal organs.

In the domestic circle such nursery names have sweet and tender associations, but they sound quite silly when they are read out at a college commencement as the serious appellations of young women who are deemed worthy of grave scholastic degrees. Suppose that when Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes was given an honorary degree in England the other day he had been described as Ollie Holmes or Noll Holmes.

These three young women allowed Dr. Samson and Dr. Burchard to address them before a large audience as if they were little girls in pinafores waiting for a present of a doll or of sweetmeats, instead of young ladies about to receive diplomas certifying that they had mastered studies within the ability of maturity only. They and their friends were not in the least indignant at the familiarity, but took it as altogether nice, pretty and proper.

Among the other recipients of degrees were two Marys and two Elizabeths, who were so called in their degrees but Mamie and Bessie probably looked on them as the victims of the prejudices of old-fashioned and unreasonable parents. Yet we can never think of Mamie, and Bessie, and Hattie as dignified young women so long as they put those baby names on their cards.

But, as we have already said, we protest in vain. They like baby names better than the names they received in baptism, and are utterly indifferent to what we say on the subject. So we must write down Hattie, and Mamie, and Bessie as Bachelors of Arts and of Letters, and not three pretty little girls to whom Dr. Burchard and Dr. Samson gave rewards of merit for good conduct in the infant class of a Sunday-school.—N. Y. Sun.

A TRAMP'S HANDS.

How They Are Kept in a Horny and Toil-Worn Condition.

"One of the essential points of success in my profession," said a dilapidated old tramp who was talking to a reporter from behind the bars of one of the cells in the city jail, "is to keep the hands in good order. You don't understand what I mean, eh? What I mean by keeping the hands in good order is this: Of course, in tramping from town to town, a man is liable to be arrested for vagrancy at any time. He must tell a story of how he has just been thrown out of work and is looking for employment, which, as yet, he has not been able to find. In nine cases out of ten the judge will ask him to show up his hands, and when he does produce them they must be horny and toil-worn. Catch on, do you? So you see it is part of my business to keep my hands looking as though they belonged to a man who was accustomed to work three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. For that purpose I carry with me this small piece of hickory wood, which is round and very smooth. About twice a day I take it between my palms and rub them so that the friction will make them hard and callous. In that way, you see, I produce the 'real result' with very little trouble and annoyance. There is a bottle of brown liquid which I occasionally use for staining the back part of my hands a beautiful sun-brown color, and there you are. When I show up my hands and tell the judge that I am a hard-working man, thrown out of employment by strikes, what can he do but believe me? The trick has saved me many a day in jail, and I flatter myself is a strictly original idea, though it is spreading rapidly. The profession, you see, is beginning to realize that it will never do to show up to a hard-hearted police judge a pair of tender, lily-white hands."—Omaha Bee.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Evidence for the Defense in the Anarchists' Trial.

Testimony to Prove that the Police Did All the Shooting—Establishing Alibis for Schwab and Parsons—Fielden on the Stand.

TRYING TO SAVE THEIR NECKS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—In the Anarchist trial Mayor Harrison was the first witness for the defense yesterday. He told how he had attended the Haymarket meeting on the night of May 4 and listened to the speeches of the Anarchists. His object was to see for himself whether or not there were any indications of violence, intending to order the meeting dispersed at the first wild outbreak. He had come to the conclusion that the meeting was a harmless affair and went home, leaving Inspector Bonfield in charge of the police at the Desplaines street station, having first ordered all the reserves at the other stations to be sent to their regular duties. Under cross-examination he told how about noon on the day of May 4 he received an account of a rumor that the freight-houses of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway were to be burned on that evening at the close of the Haymarket meeting. This rumor had caused him to attend the demonstration at the Haymarket, but nothing occurred during his stay there to warrant his taking action to break up the meeting.

B. Simonson was the second witness for the defense. He is a traveling salesman for Rothschild & Brothers, wholesalers, and a native of Chicago. He had been at the Haymarket meeting and had gone from that place to the Desplaines street station during the early stages of the gathering, and had held a conversation with Inspector Bonfield, Captain Ward and Mayor Harrison. Bonfield, he said, had told him that if women and children were not in the crowd he could take the police down and clean them out, that if he could get three thousand of them together away from the women he would make short work of them. He had been present on the Haymarket when the bomb was thrown. It had not come from the alley, but from a point on the sidewalk twenty feet south of the alley; it had fallen among the police; firing had commenced immediately after, not from the crowd, but from the police. He was most positive on the latter point, and hung to it tenaciously under the hottest cross-examination of which Attorney Ingham is capable.

Carl Richter, a journeyman harness-maker, working at Fenton & Co.'s, was then called. He had occupied a position near the mouth of the alley, from which it has been stated the bomb was thrown on the night of the Haymarket meeting, and, in effect, contradicted the State's witness Gilmer, as to Spies or Schwab entering the alley as testified to. He also swore that the firing of pistols came from the police and not from the crowd, so far as he was able to see from the point he occupied.

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—The proceedings in the Anarchists' trial yesterday began with the testimony of Dr. James D. Taylor, seventy-six years of age and rather deaf. He had been at the Haymarket meeting from twenty minutes before the speaking commenced until after the bomb was exploded. He contradicted the State's witness, Gilmer, as to the point from which the bomb was thrown, and corroborated the testimony of Simonson. He swore that the the pistol-firing had commenced simultaneously with the report of the bomb explosion, from the police officers and not from the crowd. He swore that he did not see one shot fired by the members of the retreating crowd.

L. M. Moses, of No. 801 Randolph street, was put on the stand to testify as to the general reputation of Harry Gilmer for truth and veracity. He testified that it was very bad; that he would not believe him under oath; and he gave the names of several others who had, he said, like views. One of these, Austin Mitchell, was called, but upon being asked if he knew the reputation of Gilmer among his neighbors for truth and veracity he answered "No." He was excused, and Mrs. D. P. Lee took the stand. She had heard L. M. Moses say that he would not believe Gilmer under oath, also Mrs. Moses, but that was all. Frank Stenuer told his story of the riot, but the only new thing in it was that Fielden had said or shouted "Stand!" immediately after the explosion. Joseph Kutscher, who was shot twice during the riot and was under arrest for a short time, swore that the bomb was thrown about twenty-five feet south of where he stood, and that he stood about five feet south of the alley. John O. Brixey and John Garrick swore they would not believe Gilmer under oath. An Arbeiter-Zeitung compositor named Urban, a member of the Central Labor Union, testified that in response to a request of some delegates from the Lumber-Shovers' Union the Central Labor Union had requested Spies to speak at the McCormick meeting Monday. The witness swore he saw revolvers in the hands of the police as they came up to disperse the meeting. William Gleason, an Irishman and a labor agitator, swore the shooting was all done by the police. Gleason was an Irish Fenian and chief of a revolutionary society in Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. He acknowledged having advocated the discharge of Capt Bonfield because of his action in the street-car drivers' strike. Two Germans, named William Sahl and Eberhard Hirsemengel, testified through the interpreter concerning the scenes at the Haymarket, their evidence going to substantiate, to some extent, the theory of the defense that the police were the aggressors.

CHICAGO, Aug. 5.—In the trial of the Anarchists, yesterday, August Krumm, a carpenter, who is about the same height and build as Spies, swore that he was at the mouth of the alley with a friend named Albright during the latter part of the speeches and until the explosion, and that about the moment the police were coming up he and Albright went into the alley, struck matches and lit their pipes. This testimony is considered very important by the defense, their contention being that Gilmer mistook the witness for Spies and afterwards concluded that Spies was lighting a bomb, when it was really Krumm lighting his pipe. Krumm was positive that Spies did not come into the alley. The witness was greatly confused in cross-examination. He swore that there were no boxes on the sidewalk and that the bomb fell twenty feet south of the alley, both of which statements were undoubtedly wrong. William Albright corroborated Krumm's evidence, and also swore he heard a shot before the bomb exploded and that it came from the direction of the police.

Fred Groh, the secretary of the Carpenters' Union, and August Kranse, chairman of the meeting of the union at which Engel spoke, were called to prove that Engel did not recommend his hearers to save up money to buy revolvers, nor did he say that a revolver at three or four dollars was good enough to shoot police with. This was in contradiction of Officer Wienke's testimony.

The defense also tried to get in some testimony showing that Bailiff Kelly, of the Desplaines street police station had warned a friend against being at the meeting, the inference being that the attack was premeditated by the police regardless of what the speakers might say, but this was ruled out. An attempt was also made to show that Seliger, the informer, had stated that his confession was extorted from him by the police under threat of punishment and by promises of liberty, and that the substance of it was false. This also was ruled out. In rebuttal of Gilmer's statement that he saw, or thought he saw, Schwab at the speakers' wagon when Spies was lighting the fuse in the alley, or about that time, witnesses were called to prove that Schwab was then in Lake View, having addressed a meeting of the Deering employes on the prairie there the same night.

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—In the trial of the Anarchists yesterday, the first witness was M. T. Malkoff, formerly a reporter for the Arbeiter-Zeitung and at present correspondent for a paper in Moscow, Russia. He saw Parsons, and Mrs. Parsons, and Mrs. Holmes in the saloon at Zepf's Hall for ten minutes prior to the explosion. Mr. Grinnell in cross-examination tried to show that the witness was a Russian Nihilist, but did not succeed. Mrs. Grubb swore that H. L. Gilmer boarded with her for two months this year, and that she would not believe him under oath. Henry Linnemeyer swore he was at work calcimining the upper rooms of the Arbeiter-Zeitung building the Sunday, Monday and Tuesday preceding the riot; that he kept his clothes, brushes, etc., in the closet in which the dynamite was found; that he lost a brush Tuesday and searched the closet thoroughly for it, and that there was no dynamite there, nor any greasy spot on the shelf, as described by the detectives. Theodore Lehnert swore that he, Schnaubelt and August Krueger were together about ten o'clock, or twenty minutes before the bomb exploded, on Desplaines street, near Randolph, and that Schnaubelt went away with Krueger. Witness was an Anarchist, a member of the Lehr and Wehr Verein, and acquainted with all the prisoners except Lingg. The next witness was taken from the county jail, where he has been immured for connection with the conspiracy since May 8. His name is William Schneider. He and Fielden and most of the others present adjourned to the Haymarket. He was on the wagon when the bomb exploded, and he and Fielden jumped off together and ran together into the alley. He was positive Fielden had no pistol and fired at nobody with any thing. He swore there was no armed section of the American group. There was what was called the "International Rifles," but they had no rifles or arms of any kind; they merely practiced marching in [illegible] positions. Thomas Brown, who was also confined in the jail because of his connection with the conspiracy, had seen Parsons in Zepf's Hall when the explosion occurred; had never heard of the signal "Ruhe," and was a member of the American group. The cross-examination showed that he had lent Parsons five dollars the night of the riot to help him to get out of the city. The witness also corroborated most of Schnaubelt's testimony. Henry W. Spies, a brother of the Anarchist on trial, told a sensational story to the effect that some one tried to shoot his brother August as he was jumping off the speakers' wagon when the bomb exploded, that he (Henry) struck down the revolver and received the ball himself, and that he knocked the revolver out of the assailant's hand clear under the wagon. He swore that he followed his brother and Schnaubelt from the wagon to Union street and back while they were looking for Parsons to speak to the meeting, and that Schwab was not with his brother at any time. Neither did his brother enter Crane Brothers' alley. He acknowledged having told the State officials and detectives a string of falsehoods as to his whereabouts that night. August Krueger said he was with Schnaubelt about ten o'clock the night of the riot, walked with him to Clinton street, on Randolph, and saw him start for home before the explosion occurred. John F. Waldo, a printer and a member of the American Group, said the police did all the firing. In cross-examination the witness swore that the police fired two or three shots before the explosion.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Testimony was presented by the defense in the Anarchists' trial yesterday concerning Schwab's presence at Deering from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m. of May 4. It was also shown that Fischer was at Zepf's Hall when the bomb exploded. A weak attempt was made to prove that at least one of the policemen wounded at the Haymarket was struck by a police bullet. Evidence was also given that at the lumber-shovers' meeting, near McCormick's, on May 3, Spies advised the people not to go to the factory. More evidence damaging to the character of Gilmer was introduced. During the day testimony was also offered to prove that Fischer ordered the "workingmen come armed" clause out of the "Revenge" circular in the presence of Spies and Schwab. Mrs. Holmes, the Anarchistic editress of the Alarm, took the stand and swore to seeing Parsons and Fisher in Zepf's Hall at the time the bomb exploded.

Intense interest was awakened when in the afternoon Fielden, one of the defendants, took the stand. He preferred making an affirmation to taking an oath, and the judge allowed him to affirm. He told a graphic and vivid story of his experience in the riot, the audience listening with strained attention. Arising in his chair, he illustrated how, when Captain Ward had ordered the meeting to peaceably disperse, he had bent forward to the captain and replied in conciliatory tones: "Why, captain, this is a peaceable meeting." He told how the people "howled in agony" as they frantically tried to escape the terrible storm of bullets poured on them from the ranks of the police after the explosion. He denied that he ever had a revolver or ever fired a shot in his life. He gave what seemed a fair synopsis of his speech to the crowd, including his advice to "throttle the law." Referring to the testimony of the Pinkerton detective, Jansen, regarding a certain conversation with himself in December, he said he knew long before that that Jansen was a detective and that if he wanted to talk about dynamite he would not have been such a fool as to talk about it with Jansen of all people.

SHOT DEAD.

Captain Hall, an Ex-Secret-Service Chief, Killed During a Quarrel with His Wife.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Captain Wallace W. Hall, formerly chief of the secret-service bureau of the Chicago district, was shot and instantly killed at 476 Wabash avenue about one o'clock this morning. Captain Hall and his wife returned from a visit to her mother's house on Wabash avenue about nine o'clock last evening. The wife claims that he was very drunk and quarrelsome, repeatedly threatening to kill her. While he was partly asleep and talking to himself she says she hid in a closet in the room adjoining their front bedroom on the first floor to escape personal violence. When he missed her he began looking through the house. At his request her father joined in the search. In his rage on failing to find her she says he began tearing one of her dresses to pieces. Her father begged of him to desist, and she came out from her concealment to prevent the havoc he was making with her clothing. Mrs. Hall says that when her husband saw her he told her she might as well say her prayers, as he was going to kill her, and then seized a revolver lying under the pillow. She caught the revolver. While they struggled for its possession it went off. The ball entered his heart and he sunk to the floor, saying: "I'm a dead man." Mr. James Cox, Mrs. Hall's father, corroborates her story. Mrs. Hall was taken to the Harrison street police station.

Captain Hall was transferred to St. Louis recently. His wife says he was jealous and abusive and tried to kill her in that city. The domestic difficulty became a public scandal, and it is said it was the chief cause of the Captain's removal. The loss of his position made him despondent and he is said to have been drinking heavily for several weeks.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Aug. 7.—The Prohibitionists of this (the Thirteenth) Congressional district have nominated Hon. John Sobieski, of Neosho, as their candidate for Congress.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 7.—Hon. James B. McCreary has been nominated for Congress by the Democratic convention of the Eighth Kentucky district.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 7.—R. H. M. Davison and Charles Dougherty were renominated for Congress in the First and Second Florida districts yesterday.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 7.—John W. Graham, a son of President Fillmore's Secretary of the Navy, was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Fourth North Carolina district yesterday.

STEUBENVILLE, O., Aug. 4.—The Republican Congressional convention in the Seventeenth district has nominated D. J. Taylor, of Guernsey County, as a candidate for Congress by acclamation.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 6.—The Republicans in the Third district of this State have nominated J. F. Harwood for Congress.

Work for British Soldiers.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—In consequence of the continued unsettled condition of affairs in Burmah since the conquest and annexation of that country by England, it has been decided by the English Government to intrust the supreme power of administering the affairs of the country to General MacPherson, the Commander-in-Chief of the British forces there. Five thousand troops will be sent from Madras to reinforce the troops already in Burmah. These troops will not leave until the cold season, and upon their arrival in Burmah General MacPherson will start on an expedition through the country, having in view the dispersing of the innumerable bands of dacoits who have been making incursions on the more peaceable natives, inciting them to a rising. One thousand additional police will also be sent from India to serve in Burmah.

Contemplated Union of Central American States.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 7.—The Commercio del Valle, published in this city, prints a letter in its last issue from its correspondent in the City of Mexico to the effect that the Presidents and ex-Presidents of the Central American republics of Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala are now in that city arranging a plan for the union of those States in one confederation with the ultimate view of annexation to the Mexican Republic.

Furious Windstorm.

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 7.—A telegram was received here Thursday evening stating that a cyclone had struck the town of Hartland, in Southwestern Kansas, and had demolished twenty houses and done great damage to growing crops. Sixteen cars were blown from the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe tracks, and telegraph wires were prostrated for two miles west of the town.

MORAL SENATORS.

A Few Observations Showing How the Gentlemen from Massachusetts Obtained His Seat.

The cold chills which have been creeping up and down the backs of several United States Senators during the threatened investigation of the much-investigated election of Senator Payne, of Ohio, have ceased, and these Senators have resumed their wonted cheerfulness. There will now be no further talk at this session of inquiry into the causes which led to the sudden changes of some of the members of the New York Legislature when Mr. Evarts was elected, nor to investigate the published charge that each member of the Republican Senatorial caucus in the last California Legislature who voted for Mr. Stanford received from some benevolent source the handsome present of $5,000.

Speaking of Senatorial elections, there was one, which though saturated with fraud, was never very generally understood by the public. When the ugly facts were once presented, the affair was allowed to blow over. This was perhaps because the truth was very damaging to one of those gentlemen whose goodness is so extra good that it is a sufficient explanation of any bad or questionable conduct of which they may be found guilty. Of course, this plainly points to Hon. George Frisbie Hoar, of Massachusetts.

Whether or not the trick by which Mr. Hoar was re-elected in 1881 would be deemed sufficient to unseat him, it was a most disgraceful fraud. It was a simple, clear and well sustained falsehood, telegraphed at the last minute from an apparently authorized source, to the effect that Mr. William W. Crapo, then a member of Congress, was not a candidate for the Senatorship. This gentleman was a candidate, as Senator Hoar and his friends well knew, and he was one they feared. By the well-contrived tale that he was not, the members of the Legislature who would have voted for him were deprived of exercising their real wishes in voting, and Mr. Hoar gained votes which never would have been his with Mr. Crapo known to be a candidate.

The Senate became so virtuous in 1873, under the presure of the Credit-Mobilier panic, that, to avoid its righteous wrath, Alexander Caldwell resigned his seat as a Senator from Kansas, having then four years to serve, because it had been shown that friends of his had bought off a rival candidate. They had not got his votes away from him by saying he was not a candidate; they had simply paid a mercenary the price he had placed upon his ambition. The argument was that the limitation thus put upon the choice of legislators, by depriving them of one of the candidates who had sought votes, had changed the result of the election by giving to Caldwell votes he would not otherwise have received. A vote on the case was anticipated by Caldwell's resignation.

The case of Hoar is the same as that of Caldwell, with this difference in favor of the latter: He paid his money, and got the rival out of his way, so that he might receive the votes others left free. In Hoar's case the rival did not cease to be a candidate. It only cost the price of a telegram to make the members of the Legislature believe that he would not accept. He was simply lied out of his chance, and those who preferred him to Hoar were lied out of their chance to vote their preference, and enough voted for Hoar instead to give him the election. The lie was sent by telegram from a town in Massachusetts, and signed by a person known to be so near to Mr. Crapo that it produced the same effect as though signed by that gentleman himself. No one doubted its truth, and Mr. Crapo never knew of it until it had done its work and Hoar had been elected.

Mr. Hoar never insisted upon or even asked for an investigation to have it determined whether or not he inaugurated or connived at this disgraceful swindle by which his present seat in the Senate was secured. Mr. Crapo felt greatly outraged. He would most likely have been elected instead of Hoar but for the corrupt trickery and falsehood to which the latter or his friends resorted. And yet, himself holding a seat thus tainted by a coarse and vulgar fraud and secured by the votes of members who preferred Crapo, but were falsely told at the opportune moment that he would not stand, Senator Hoar has been spending his days and nights for some weeks past in a vain endeavor to smirch Senator Payne. An investigation of the circumstances attending his own election would show, as above stated, that he holds his seat by votes stolen from another by conspiracy and falsehood. How long would it take him in such a case, if another than himself had been involved, to conclude that the beneficiary of the fraud must be supposed to have been a willing party to it? What effrontery in him to sit in judgement on the title of a brother Senator to a seat in the body in which he himself is an intruder.—N. Y. Sun.

Pure Republican Posers.

The effort of Senator John Sherman to gloss over the conspiracy of Ohio Republicans to oust Senator Payne was a poor weak one indeed. No man in the wide world knows better than John Sherman that there is not the shadow of an excuse for an investigation of the foul charge that Payne obtained his seat by corruption for he knows the tricky politicians of his State—indeed he is one of them—and has seen them resort to despicable methods, which in any other State would have sent them to prison, to gain a point. It ill becomes Sherman to pose as a pure politician, for the people know him as a man who leaves nothing undone to accomplish his end. They have not forgotten how he used the Treasury Department while at its head to advance his political interest nor can they forget that he is rated as a millionaire, although he has done nothing but dabble in politics for forty years and his salary has never exceeded $5,000, except during the short time he was in the treasury. There is not a Republican in Ohio who does not know that the election of Henry B. Payne was as fair and honest as any that ever took place at Columbus. How did the Senators for Nevada, Colorado and even Oregon reach the goal of their ambition? The pet of the Republican party Mahone, and his tool Riddleberger, reached the Senate by the most despicable corruption this country has ever witnessed. There was not a Federal office in Virginia that was not prostituted to advance their political ends and that too under John Sherman, who now assumes the role of a reformer.—Buffalo Times.

——Senator Blair submitted a report to the Senate in the matter of the vetoed bill granting a pension to Newcomb Parker. He attempts to be very severe on the President, though it would seem that discussing pension matters would be a very unpleasant duty for Senator Blair, in view of his suit against a poor widow for whom he had secured a pension, which has just come to light.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

DETESTABLE WARFARE.

Exposure of a Sample Lot of Republican and New York "Tribune" Falsehoods.

Nothing could be more detestably mean than these efforts to break down Civil-Service reform simply because the administration of it is in Democratic hands which consist of gross misrepresentation of every thing done and attempted. The New York Tribune contained an article on "nullifying the Civil Service law" which hardly contained a truthful statement or a fair inference from beginning to end, and the writer was probably aware of that fact. It begins by saying that the "course of Democratic officials to nullify the law is shown by their method of reorganizing the examining boards." After stating what is not true, that the rules forbid the appointing officer from having access to the list of eligibles, it says: "The first thing the Democratic officials did was to reorganize the examining boards and to have their private secretaries and chief deputies made the chairmen and secretaries." This will do for a specimen.

The Democratic "officials," meaning the appointing officers, do not organize or reorganize the examining boards. That is done by the Civil Service Commission at Washington. It has entire control of the machinery of examinations. The constitution of the examining boards here and in other cities which the Tribune criticises was determined by the Republican commission of which Mr. Eaton was the head, and was not a "revolution of the existing practice when the Democrats came into office," but was precisely the practice always pursued. The members of the board in the custom house here are appointed, not by Mr. Hedden, as this reckless writer says, but by the commission on the nomination of the Collector, Surveyor and Naval Officer, and the present board was appointed by the Eaton commission. The chairmen and secretaries are not "made" by the "Democratic officials," but by the commission on the nomination of the members of the board itself, and the present commission has refused to confirm those where they are "private secretaries and chief deputies," establishing a rule for the first time that such officers shall not serve in that capacity.

After utterly misrepresenting this matter of organizing examining boards the Tribune says: "The new Civil-Service Commission not only winked at but openly abetted this method of evading the law. It changed the regulations to permit Collector Hedden to oust the old officers of the examining board." This though Collector Hedden has nothing directly to do with constituting the board or choosing its officers and the commission has specifically put a stop to the practice, always possible before, of having private secretaries and special deputies serve as the officers of the board. As to the eligible list and appointing officers, the abuse came in under the Republican commission, and the present commission is the first to propose making the rules forbid the appointing officers to have access to the list of eligibles. In short, this commission is fighting against abuses which it inherited and which sprung up under the law before the Democrats came into office. The only purpose of reckless misrepresentations of this kind is to discredit the reform itself and help to break it down. It is a mean kind of warfare, but too easily exposed to be effective.—N. Y. Times.

CONTENTED DEMOCRATS.

The Republican Vote on the Payne Investigation Analyzed—A Bad Outlook for the Party of Purity in 1888.

In the last Presidential election the Republicans carried the following States: California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin. The four crucial States were Connecticut, Indiana, New Jersey and New York. If the Republicans had carried the first three of that four; or, if, losing the first three, they had carried the fourth, they would have won the campaign. But they lost all four, and were consequently defeated by an electoral vote of 219 to 182.

The possibility of Republican success in 1888 depends entirely upon the political course of the States above mentioned. There has been no change in the situation. They talk of carrying West Virginia and Tennessee; but we have heard the same foolish talk for many years, and it has amounted to nothing. There were circumstances of a very popular character which gave them phenomenal strength, both in Virginia and in West Virginia, in 1884, which can never occur again, and even then they failed lamentably in their expectations. They have no hope for 1888 save in the eighteen States which they carried in 1884, and in the four States above-mentioned, which they failed to carry.

Now, as every politician of sagacity knows, the Republican political management of these twenty-two States has its head and center in their Representatives in the United States Senate; and it will therefore be of especial interest to inquire how the Republican Senators from the States in question voted on the report of the Senate committee to dismiss the proposition to investigate Senator Payne's election. Those who voted to vindicate Senator Payne are as follows: The only Senator (Republican) from California. Both Senators (Republican) from Colorado. Both Senators (Republican) from Illinois. Both Senators (Republicans) from Kansas. One of the two Republican Senators from Michigan, Mr. Sabin, late head of the Republican National Executive Committee. One of the two Republican Senators from Nebraska. The only Republican Senator from Nevada. One of the Republican Senators from Oregon. The only Republican Senator who voted from Pennsylvania, and his name was Cameron. The two Senators (Republican) from Rhode Island. One of the two Republican Senators from Vermont. The only Senator (Republican) voting from Wisconsin. The only Republican Senator from New Jersey. The two Senators (Republican) from New York.

So it appears that of the twenty-two States to which the Republicans look for success in the campaign of 1888 only eight, as represented by their United States Senators, sustained the Halstead-Foraker conspiracy, while fourteen went dead against it. And yet the Halstead Commercial has the hardihood to denounce the Republican Senatorial representation of these fourteen States as "corrupt." All of which seems to us especially conducive to Republican harmony, and particularly promising for a Republican victory in 1888. Upon the whole, Democrats can afford to be quite content with the situation.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

——The Payne case was investigated fully in Columbus by enemies of the Senator, and the result was a complete failure to discover any criminating evidence. In any other State that would have ended the matter. In Ohio the flaming bigots, mindful only of party advantage, at once bethought them of a national investigation. The Senate contemplated the character of the complainants and at once refused to grant their request. Its action amounts to a declaration by the highest legislative body in the Union that the Republican leaders of Ohio are unworthy of belief.—Chicago Herald.

Driving Piles With Dynamite.

Mr. Pradanovic, of Pesth, has been using dynamite for driving piles. He places an iron plate 16 inches in diameter and 3 3-4 inches thick in a perfectly horizontal position on the pile to be driven. A dynamite cartridge in the form of a disc containing 17 1-2 ounces of dynamite, is placed on the iron plate and exploded by electricity. It is stated that the pile is driven by each explosion to a depth equal to five blows of a pile engine weighing 14 3-4 Vienna hundredweight falling 9 feet 10 inches. The iron plate on the average resists twenty-five explosions.—N. Y. Post.

Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

JAILS OVERFLOWING.

A Number of the Belfast Rioters Sent to Dublin Prison.

Who Commenced the Attack Made a Question of Veracity—Rioting at Dungannon.

BELFAST, Aug. 16.—A man named Jackson who was wounded in Sunday morning's riot is dead. The other wounded men progress favorably. There was some stone throwing last night, but no one was seriously injured. There are ominous signs that the authorities fear attempts at reprisals to-night on the part of the mobs. Public houses are being closed, and other precautions are being taken. Scores of prisoners have been sent to Kilmainham jail at Dublin to await trial. The local gaol is being full. The usual shots were fired throughout the day and evening. Men from Queen's Island, while marching home, sang "No home rule for Ireland," and a parody of "God save Ireland." This maddened the Catholics. The military in charging the mob last evening bayoneted Magistrate Burke, who was seeking a wounded rioter. Burke was in plain clothes. The Catholic newspapers here accuse the Orangemen of commencing Sunday's attack, while the Protestant papers say that the Orangemen acted in self-defense.

DUBLIN, Aug. 16.—At Dungannon to-day bands of Nationals paraded the Protestant quarter of the town shouting for home rule and cursing the Queen. A riot broke out and several persons were injured. The police had to force their way between the Protestants and Catholics, thus preventing a desperate fight. One Nationalist was arrested with a knife in his hand. A renewal of the riot is feared. Party feeling is intense.

WAS IT DOCTORED?

The Present Record in Cutting's Case Alleged To Be an Afterthought.

EL PASO, TEX., Aug. 16.—Copies of the official record of the Cutting trial arrived here Saturday from Chihuahua. This document puts an entirely new face on the Cutting case, inasmuch as it states that the crime for which Cutting is under sentence was committed on Mexican soil by the circulation of the El Paso Herald in Paso Del Norte. Leading lawyers here admit Mexico's jurisdiction over Cutting if these are the grounds on which sentence was passed, but it is asserted here that the official record has been doctored at Chihuahua since the original position assumed by the Court has been shown to be untenable by the United States. This is made stronger by the fact that the judge refused to give out the record until after its publication in the official paper of the State. There is no abatement of the desire for war. Interior towns of the State of Chihuahua, Consiela and Durango are highly excited. According to the reports of travelers just returned, they declare that the Mexican armies will eat their Christmas dinner in St. Louis.

Attempted Assassination.

ATCHISON, KAS., Aug. 16.—An attempt was made early yesterday morning to assassinate J. F. Tufts, Assistant Attorney General for Atchison County. BLOODY BELFAST.

A Night of Continuous Rioting—Bushwhacking From House Tops.

BELFAST, Aug. 15.—Rioting has been resumed in Belfast. From midnight last night until four o'clock this morning a rifle fight was in progress on the Shankhill road and the Old Falls road. One person was killed and many wounded. The town is seething. Sectarian strife has resulted in a deplorable, wild, bloodied fashion. Expert marksmen this morning conducted a rifle fight from roof-tops, chimney stacks and street corners. Immense crowds of partisans, who carefully kept out of range, were prepared to assist by supplying ammunition and removing the wounded. The sides were equally divided. The moon shone brightly through the contest. The Orangemen admit that one of their men, named Macfarlane, was killed, and that two others, named Smith and Johnson, were mortally wounded, also, that there were numerous minor casualties on their side. While minor casualties in the Orange ranks were quite numerous, they claim, however, that they killed and wounded a large number of Catholics, but the latter deny that any of their number were killed and admit that few were wounded. The houses in the vicinity of the battle ground are riddled with bullets. The military made repeated attempts to stop the firing, but whenever they appeared the combatants shifted their positions, and it was finally five o'clock in the morning, and after the riot act had been read twice, that the soldiers, by a succession of charges, were enable to clear the streets, and this they did only temporarily. The town has been in a turmoil all day, and the police were several times attacked and fired upon by the mob.

AUGUST 16.—At two o'clock this morning the town is quiet. Desultory fighting was maintained throughout the day and until midnight, when the priests, by almost superhuman efforts, induced the Catholics to retire. At this hour all the wounded in the hospitals are progressing favorably except one, a little girl, who was shot in the chest and is dying.

ATTENTION, MILITIA.

The Acting Secretary of War Wants to Know How Many Will Volunteer to Fight Mexico.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 15.—The usual Sunday quiet which ordinarily prevails in the War Department was broken to-day. Adjutant-General Drum, who is Acting Secretary of War, was on duty, with several clerks and a force of telegraphers. Messages were sent to a number of commanders of local military organizations by General Drum asking how many volunteers they could muster to go to the Mexican frontier in the event that their services shall be required. It is not, it is understood, for the purpose of mustering a force for Mexico at once, but merely as a precautionary move to ascertain what additional force can be made available to co-operate with the regular military in case trouble should grow out of the present complications.

General Sedgwick off to Mexico.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—It can now be authoritatively stated that Mr. Sedgwick, of New York, goes to Paso del Norte and Chihuahua by request of Secretary Bayard and in connection with the Cutting case. His mission is in no sense of a diplomatic nature, but is simply to secure for the Department of State fuller information with regard to the case. The instructions to General Sedgwick are to take a positive stand in defense of Cutting's position. The envoy will go by rail via New Orleans, thence over the Southern Pacific to El Paso, where he will take the Mexican Central into the City of Mexico. By leaving New York this evening he should, if not interrupted in travel, reach his destination on next Friday at noon. It need not necessarily consume more than a week to conclude the consultation, but as the Mexicans are a slow-going people, it is not supposed it will be completed short of twenty days.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 15.—Twenty-five novices received the black veil at the Notre Dame Convent to-day. The ceremonies were very impressive. A funeral pall was lowered over the body, shrouding them, signifying their burial from the world.

POINTS TOWARD PEACE.

A Special Envoy to be Sent to the City of Mexico at Mexico's Request.

Probability That Both Governments Will Mass Troops Upon the Border to Preserve Order, During the Consultation.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—A World special from Washington says that in yesterday's consideration by the Cabinet of the Cutting case, the most important matter discussed was a proposition received Wednesday evening from the Mexican government. The Mexican authorities make the proposition that if the State Department will send to the City of Mexico an able lawyer, as a special envoy of this government, to confer with the Attorney General of Mexico, as to the proper interpretation of the law under which Cutting is held, they believe an amicable solution of the problem can be arrived at. After two hours' discussion on this subject by the Cabinet, it was unanimously agreed that the proposition from the Mexican government be accepted, and a representative sent to the City of Mexico as soon as possible. This government is not to be bound by the report that the representative may make, but upon this report there can be established additional foundation for further diplomatic procedure. Pending this agreement neither government will take any action. It is not improbable that both governments will mass troops upon the border for the purpose of preserving order during the period employed in the consultation. The special envoy will not be a person who is in any way connected with the service of the government.

REVOLT IN HAYTI.

A Defeated Candidate for President Raises a Very Large Sized Row.

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—A letter to the Journal from San Domingo, dated July 25, says: The Presidential election took place here on the 26th of June, General Ulysses Hereaux being elected by a large majority. General Masses, the defeated candidate, left for Samana two days after the elections, raised an army of 2,000 men, attacked Santiago and was defeated by the Government forces. General Hereaux, the President-elect, left here to-day, leading 5,000 men, to reinforce General Luperon at Santiago. General Scaraman left Port Au Plat, on the North Side, with 5,000 men, and will join Hereaux, making an army of 12,000 men. This is the strongest revolution that has started in San Domingo for some years, but the revolt will be of short life, as General Hereaux is a brave and determined man, and understands the mode of fighting in this country.

The Corn Crops.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—The corn season so far, according to a comprehensive report in the Chicago Times, has been a very peculiar one, starting out as it did under the most favorable circumstances—the month of June dry and cool, with just enough moisture to keep the corn growing and put the fields in condition for uninterrupted cultivation until the 1st of July; but ever since that date the corn crop has been subjected, with the exception of some limited areas in Ohio and Indiana, to such extremes of dry weather and heat that the general prospects to-day point to a crop reduced in quantity and quality.

Several others were bruised and trampled upon.

CONCERNING CUTTING.

Bayard's Peremptory Demand for His Release Has Not Been Withdrawn.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—The News' Washington special says: As the result of a conversation last night with the Secretary of State it may be stated that there is absolutely no truth in the story sent out from the City of Mexico that our Government has withdrawn its peremptory demand for Cutting's release, or changed its attitude in this case in any way. There is no disposition to hurry or annoy or embarrass the Mexican Government or its courts, and the claim which its Minister here makes that it has a right to punish all American citizens for an offense committed in the United States will never be admitted tacitly or otherwise. The Mexican officials have not charged Cutting with circulating a libel in Mexico, they have charged him with uttering a libel in the United States. This is shown not only by the form of the charges, but by the fact that the Texas law has been taken into the Mexican court and translated by way of showing that the act of Cutting was an offense in the jurisdiction where it was committed. The case cited by Mexican authorities of a Mexican who committed an offense in the United States and was punished for it by Mexico is not a case in point, because our Government can not concern itself about what Mexico does with her own citizens. Neither are the libel suits in France and England against the owner of the New York paper cases in point, for they were civil suits, and they were based on the circulation of the alleged libel in the countries where the suits were brought, an allegation not made in this case. Mexico has distinctly claimed a right to punish a citizen of the United States for an offense committed in the United States by a criminal prosecution, and our Government will not assent to this in any form.

ST. JOHNS, N. B., Aug. 12.—The Canadian Government has issued orders forbidding American vessels from entering the Bay of Chaleurs on pain of instant seizure, and has stationed the cruisers Critic and Lindsey at the entrance of the bay, while the flagship Lansdowne, plies the neighboring waters. There are now 200 troops stationed at Piedras Negras, and it is stated on good authority that 500 more left Sabinas Tuesday for Piedras Negras. It is also known that 100 are stationed at the pass below Guerrero, under command of Lveaaor Valdez. One company of United States cavalry, consisting of fifty men, is stationed at Eagle Pass, and this place is defenseless.

EVIDENCE ALL IN.

The Taking of Testimony in the Anarchists Trial Concluded.

Stories of the Principal Defendants—What the Defense Claims to Have Proven—Arguments of Lawyers.

THE ANARCHISTS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Three of the Anarchist prisoners, Schwab, Spies and Parsons, were placed on the witness stand yesterday. Schwab was examined by Mr. Foster as to his whereabouts the night of the Haymarket slaughter and denied in whole and in detail the statements concerning him sworn to by the witnesses Thompson and Gilmer, and corroborated the story of his travels to Deering and his speech making there as told by the various witnesses examined in his behalf. He refused to say whether or not he was an Anarchist.

Spies was the next witness. He gave an account of the McCormick meeting and his part therein. The person who called for the raid on the McCormick hands stood near a hundred feet from him and spoke in a tongue he did not then understand. His blood "boiled" when he saw the police firing on the women and children. Somebody told him two people were killed and about twenty wounded. He at once came home and wrote the "Revenge" circular, heading it "Workmen, To Arms!" He read in the five o'clock paper that five or six were killed, and then he changed the "two" in the circular to "six." He detailed his experience at the Haymarket meeting and denied in full the stories of Witnesses Thompson and Gilmer as to his (Spies) having lighted the bomb. He had had four bombs at the Arbeiter-Zeitung office; one man left two and another man left two. He didn't know either of the men. In talking with the reporter, Wilkinson he had explained street warfare with dynamite to the reporter, using Market square and the tunnel in his illustrations. The word "Ruhe" was inserted with a batch of general announcements on the request of somebody unknown. Balthasar Rau told him about three o'clock, May 4, that if the word "Ruhe" was in that afternoon's issue of the paper it was a signal for the armed section to be ready to defend the people "in case the police precipitated a riot." The dynamite in his drawer he had bought for experiments, and he also kept it to supply the reporters with sensations when they called on him. He knew nothing of the big parcel of dynamite found in the office. He "always carried a revolver," but happened not to have one with him the night of the riot. On cross-examination witness said that he had other objects than that of curiosity in his experiments with the dynamite, but did not state what they were. Spies acknowledged that he wrote the "Revenge" circular to induce the people to arm themselves and resist the police. The climax in the cross-examination came when Ingham handed Spies a letter and asked him if he had replied to it. The letter was from Herr Most to "Dear Spies" and related to the proposed shipment of twenty to twenty-five pounds of "medicine" (dynamite) to the scene of the labor troubles then going on in Hocking valley. Spies admitted having received the letter but could not remember that he had replied to it.

Parsons next testified, and said that after his remarks at the Haymarket meeting he went to Zepf's Hall, and was at the latter place when the bomb exploded. At the request of counsel he gave in substance his speech made at the Haymarket. He spoke for a long time, and his gesticulation and elocution were calculated to give the impression that he was really addressing an audience. He told his audience, in the course of his remarks, that the Chicago Times had advocated throwing hand-grenades at striking seamen, that the Tribune advocated giving strychnia for tramps, and that Tom Scott advocated using rifles upon the railroad strikers. He urged them to defend themselves by the use of arms and dynamite. He said that he advocated the use of dynamite by working-men as a defense against those unlawfully attacking them. When he used the words, "To Arms," he meant that working-men should provide themselves with arms with which to defend themselves against force, if necessary.

In cross-examination he practically admitted advocating dynamite—he advocated any thing "necessary to success." Both he and Spies declared themselves Anarchists without hesitation or equivocation.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—The defense called to the witness stand yesterday H. L. Gilmer. He was asked if he had not, in an interview with W. A. Graham, a reporter, on May 5 said that the man who threw the bomb lit it himself. Witness replied in the negative. Graham was then called, and said that Gilmer did tell him in the interview referred to, that the bomb was lighted by the person throwing it; that that person had his back turned towards him (Gilmer), but he thought he would know him if he saw him again. The defense then rested its case, and evidence in rebuttal was taken. This consisted mainly in the testimony of witnesses who knew Gilmer. Ex-United States District Attorney Richard S. Tuthill, of this city, was among those testifying to Gilmer's good character.

Samuel Merrill, president of the Citizens' National Bank of Des Moines, Ia., had been a resident of that city seventeen years. He had been Governor of the Hawkeye State. He said that Gilmer's reputation for truth and veracity was good. Cross-examined, the witness said he had known Gilmer five or six years. He had employed Gilmer as a painter. Gilmer had no account at the bank and witness never met him socially. He never heard any one say that Gilmer was truthful or untruthful. The witness was not at the Palmer House May 4. He did not know that he was expected there at that time. He had not notified Mr. Gilmer that he would be at the Palmer House May 4.

A number of policemen were next called to prove that no revolvers were displayed by them before the explosion of the bomb at the Haymarket meeting.

Inspector Bonfield swore that he never said to Simonson, a witness for the defense, that if he could get together 3,000 Socialists, without their women and children, he would fix them. The State then announced the close of their case. The arguments will begin at once.

The three chief points claimed to have been made by the defense in their seven days' testimony were as follows:

1. That Gilmer was a falsifier.
2. That Fielden did not shoot at the police.
3. That Schnaubelt was not the person who threw the bomb.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Mr. Walker's speech in the Anarchists' trial yesterday made it evident that while the prosecution will insist that the witness Gilmer told the truth about the throwing of the bomb by Schnaubelt and the lighting of the fuse by Spies, they will claim that even though Gilmer's testimony and that of Thompson's should not be taken into account there is ample evidence to show that the defendants are guilty of the crime as charged in the indictment. Having made a comprehensive statement as to the law in the case, and having quoted freely to sustain the claim that when a number of persons agree to commit murder, or advise others to do so, the time and place not being definitely determined on, the adviser or conspirators are guilty of the offense when committed equally with the principal. Mr. Walker proceeded to show from the writings and speeches of the principal defendants that they had organized a conspiracy of murder in this city, and that they counseled and preached the overthrow of the existing social system by force. He pointed out with great effect that the defense had made no effort to disprove this charge of general conspiracy as laid down in the opening speech of the State's Attorney. On the contrary, Mr. Salomon's opening speech for the defense was a virtual plea of guilty on this general charge. Mr. Walker held there was abundance of uncontradicted testimony, some of which was supplied by the defendants' witnesses, to prove an organized conspiracy for the murder of the police the night of the 4th of May. The appeals of Parsons and Fielden to the working-men to arm themselves were skillfully used in support of Mr. Walker's position.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Mr. Walker closed his speech for the prosecution in the Anarchists' case yesterday morning. He quoted freely from the evidence, the speeches and admissions of Spies, Fielden, Schwab and Parsons to prove that they were members of the band of conspirators who organized the massacre of the Haymarket [illegible] and Lingg, Engel and Fischer with the arch-Anarchists, and [illegible] the efforts of the defense to prove [illegible].

Mr. Zeisler's speech, following that of Mr. Walker, showed that the defense was not intimidated. [illegible] of the jurors that Gilmer's story about Schnaubelt's throwing the bomb is untrue. He characterized the police as a body of cowardly knaves, and denounced Gilmer as a professional tramp and a constitutional liar. Mr. Zeisler maintained that unless the identity of the principal in the murder of Officer Degan was established the prisoners could not be held as accessories. It should be shown that the person who threw the bomb was a member of the conspiracy to which the prisoners belonged in order to connect the latter with the murders. He denied that there was a general conspiracy to bring about a social revolution. The advocacy of force was open and public. It was permitted by the municipal authorities, therefore it must have been harmless. No time was fixed for the revolution to occur. The social revolution was to come, but no one could fix the date—the time was as indefinite to the propagandists of Socialism as the coming of the Messiah was to the Jews.

Referring to the testimony as to Spies' utterances at Grand Rapids, Mich., and his interview with Reporter Wilkinson respecting the inauguration of the social revolution on May 1, Mr. Zeisler endeavored to show that Spies was jesting about these things, and that he referred to some indefinite revolution which time would bring about. The advice given by Spies, Parsons and Fielden to working-men to arm themselves meant nothing but that they should organize and stand together, and Fielden's speech in which he urged his hearers to visit several leading business houses and help themselves only meant that the system was unjust which allowed so unequal a distribution of property. These men were talking to men who were ignorant of the aims of Socialism, and these utterances were used merely as logical deductions to illustrate the problems as a teacher would use illustrations to explain intricate problems to his scholars.

After referring to the meeting at 54 Lake street on the night before the tragedy, at which the alleged conspiracy was concocted, Mr. Zeisler said that Waller, who was the arch-conspirator, having been chairman of that meeting, told much in his evidence for the prosecution that was untrue. His testimony was for the greater part manufactured, and he received payment therefor in cold cash from Captain Schaack.

Court adjourned at five o'clock, and Mr. Zeisler will finish his address to-day.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—Mr. Zeisler concluded his argument for the defense in the Anarchists' trial yesterday morning with a bitter denunciation of the police and the witness Gilmer, and an appeal to any member of the jury who might have a reasonable doubt, to hold out until doomsday rather than convict, and not to be starved into an agreement on a verdict.

Mr. Ingham followed for the prosecution in the afternoon. Dwelling first on the evidence as a whole, he showed that each proven fact was not as a link in a chain of guilt but as the strand of a cable which spanned the whole tide of criminality. The theory of the State was that for two or more years there had existed an organized conspiracy to overthrow the law and that every man in that conspiracy threw the bomb that killed Officer Degan. The defendants had sought the destruction of the law, but that law was strong enough to secure the punishment of those who sought to throttle it. Mr. Ingham then proceeded with an analysis of the general conspiracy, tracing its history, and ingeniously weaving into his narrative every important fact of the testimony.

He dwelt on the fact that in the so-called "American group" there were not more than a score of Americans, and more than half of these were women and cranks, while the only dangerous members were Parsons and Fielden. The bulk of the Anarchists were the offscourings of Continental Europe, who, though not yet citizens of this country—many of them, as in the case of Lingg, not being residents here for more than a twelvemonth—sought to subvert social order and establish the rule of a miserable handful of foreign Anarchists by means of dynamite instead of the rule of the majority. He compared Spies' writings during the first days of May with those of the Commune that flooded Paris with gore and substituted for the Virgin Mother a brazen prostitute who personated the Goddess of Liberty.

Mr. Ingham traced the development of the Haymarket conspiracy, and made a strong argument to prove its careful planning, the utilization of the labor difficulties by Spies, the summoning of the armed sections to prepare for the attack, the careful selection of the place for slaughter, the incitements to violence by Spies and his confederates Parsons and Fielden, and the subordinate but important parts which Engel, Lingg, Fischer and Schwab played in arranging the plan of attack and in providing the materials therefor. Mr. Ingham had not concluded when the court adjourned.

THE BANKERS.

The Bankers' Association Holds Its Annual Convention at Boston.

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—The annual convention of the National Association of American Bankers was called to order at ten o'clock a. m. yesterday, with more than a usually full attendance of delegates. Rev. Phillips Brooke opened the proceedings with prayer, after which President Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, delivered his opening address.

T. W. Hart, of this city, delivered an address of welcome, after which the president read a letter from ex-Secretary of the Treasury Hugh McCulloch, urging a suspension of silver coinage, the discontinuance of the issue of notes under five dollars, and the recoinage of a part of the dollars now in the treasury into fractional pieces. Mr. Horton, of Ohio, said that a concurrent restoration of silver to its former prestige was necessary to the preservation of our degree of civilization. He also introduced a set of resolutions in support of this proposition, and gave his experience as a delegate to the monetary conference at Paris.

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—The second day's session of the annual convention of the National Association of American Bankers was called to order at ten o'clock by President Gage. The committee on nominations reported a list of officers, headed by Logan C. Murray, of New York, for president, all of whom were elected. Immediately after the election of the officers President Gage made a brief address and called the new president to the chair. President Murray addressed the convention briefly.

Judge Lowell, of Massachusetts, read a lengthy paper on "Bankruptcy Legislation."

At the conclusion of Judge Lowell's paper a communication was read from C. N. Jordan, Treasurer of the United States, which showed that the number of silver dollars coined to June 30, 1886, was 233,723,286; estimated value of the subsidiary silver, $70,000,000, a total of $303,723,286. The value of the silver in the standard dollar of to-day's price is 71.21 cents, while subsidiary silver is valued at 66.61. Exclusive of abrasion, the present value of the silver coinage is $213,061,352. It cost to maintain this circulation $14.42 per $1,000.

A report of the executive council urging Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce and civil and political associations of every kind to make persistent efforts to secure a repeal of the law, or suspension of the coinage of such silver dollars, was unanimously adopted; also a resolution urging that continued efforts be made to secure an international uniform basis of value between gold and silver.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the Executive Council to take such steps as are necessary to procure such legislation as in the future will secure the return of fugitives from justice who may be at large on account of defects in the existing treaties.

The Executive Council organized with John J. Knox, of New York, chairman. Adjourned sine die.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

In dark and heavy styles low grades above the very lowest have been better supported and are now quotably higher. [illegible] styles are about 25c higher, and high grades such as good wrappery or long leaf, have sold at the relatively high prices prevailing [illegible]. There appears to be no purchasing at present either in dark or Burley tobacco, except for special destinations and the offerings have increased to meet the apparently improved requirements of legitimate trade. Low grade Burley tobacco ranging up to about $7 have more than retained their special activity and have advanced about [illegible]. Medium grades are about 50c better and the grades above $10 firm and irregularly higher. Sales of Burley leaf or wrappery character have been made all the way up from $14 to $24.50. Crop conditions have no doubt improved in consequence of the rains of this week and last. Late information implies that there has been but little topping of plants in any county east of Louisville, and none at all in most counties. DESTRUCTIVE storms in various portions of the State occurred a few days ago. In Pulaski County, Joe Riddle and a young child were killed by lightning. In Logan County, immense rocks loosened by a tree blown over on the mountain side, crushed into the cabin of Mathew Parks, fatally injuring him. Considerable stock is also reported killed by lightning.

AT Louisville, Henry Gode, a carpenter, lost his balance and fell to the ground twenty-five feet, fracturing his skull and breaking his neck. He leaves a family.

THE funeral service of the late Governor John W. Stevenson, of Kentucky, was held in Covington on the 13th. By order of Governor Knott the State Department offices of Kentucky remained closed all day in respect to the memory of the dead statesman.

THE Misses Minnie and Emma Scott, of Bourbon County, were presented with a good-sized farm a few years ago by their father. Their success as farmers is shown by the following: They grew last year ten and one-quarter acres of tobacco, and had a yield of 19,500 pounds, which was sold a few days ago in Cincinnati, and brought them the pretty sum of $1,738 85.

MAUD WOLF, seven years old, was fatally crushed in a tobacco press at Louisville, a few mornings ago. The little girl, in playing near it, loosened one of the props, and the huge machine fell over on her, almost crushing her as flat as a board. She died from her injuries soon after.

COLONEL R. M. KELLY, late pension agent at Louisville, is charged with a shortage of $55,950 in his accounts. The Colonel claims he owes the Government nothing, but as to money loaned him by personal friends, that is a matter between him and them.

FLORA MURRAY, who was stabbed in the abdomen the other night by George Mann, died two days afterwards at the City Hospital, Louisville. The weapon penetrated the woman's stomach and touched the backbone, and the nervous shock produced by this contact was the immediate cause of her death.

AT Louisville Louis Woolfolk, stopped about midnight at the corner of Shelby and Walnut streets to wait for a car to go home. He leaned against the door of a house, sitting directly upon the street. The door flew open and Woolfolk found himself sprawling on the floor of the front-room. The man of the house pounced down upon him, taking him for a burglar, and opened fire with his revolver. Two bullets pierced Mr. W.'s hat, just grazing his head, before he could quiet the aroused citizen and explain matters.

BERTIE MYRICK, son of Mr. J. Myrick, a Louisville merchant, went in bathing several weeks ago and cut his leg on a piece of tin, producing only a slight wound, apparently. Several days afterward the wound became malignant, and on the 13th he was dying of blood-poisoning.

THE other morning Prof. Clarence Pinguely, leader of the orchestra at Esculapia Springs, was riding a horse down the mountain road leading to the hotel. His horse slipped and threw him over his head and fell on top of him. He was taken to the hotel, where he lay in a horribly bruised condition for six hours before a physician reached him. Two doctors have examined him, but are unable to say whether any of the bones in his head are fractured or not. The chances are against his recovery.

THERE was a serious wreck the other morning one-half mile south of Sulphur Station, on the Louisville & Cincinnati Short Line. Freight train No. 12 and the midnight passenger train, No. 3, from Cincinnati met head and head full tilt around a curve. Both engines were smashed, five cars of freight were converted into kindling wood, and several coaches of passengers were badly damaged. Frank Webber, the head brakeman on the freight, was killed outright, and Postal Clerk A. S. Look and freight conductor J. L. Taylor were badly injured. All three live in Louisville. The accident was entirely due to an oversight on the part of Riddell, the engineer on the freight.

CHAS. MCCORMACK, a farmer living near Zion, shot and fatally wounded Thomas Jackson the other morning. Jackson was employed on McCormack's farm and was in possession of a mule belonging to the latter, and which he refused to surrender. McCormack went to the house of Jackson and demanded his property. This enraged Jackson, and after hot words between them Jackson made a murderous onslaught upon his employer with a knife, when the latter drew a revolver and fired two shots, both balls entering the abdomen. McCormack then surrendered himself.

WM. STUART, at Harlan Court-house, Harlan County, was killed a few days ago. He was shot by Frank Clem, with a pistol, while walking along the street with a shotgun on his shoulder, and instantly killed. The killing was the result of an old grudge. The ball took effect just over the right ear. Stuart was a weak-minded fellow who had just returned from the penitentiary, where he had served two terms for house-breaking.

EX-GOVERNOR JOHN W. STEVENSON, died at his residence in Covington the other morning. He was born in Richmond, Va., in 1812.

COVINGTONIANS are discussing the question of building a Widow's Home in their city.

THE famous Rowan County war is at an end. Craig Tolliver, the leader of one faction, and Cook Humphrey, leader of the other, have signed an agreement to leave the State forever, and the State's Attorney agreed to file away the indictments against them indefinitely. Tolliver has gone to Texas and Humphrey to Missouri, where they will settle. The troops have been withdrawn from Rowan County.

A TERRIFIC rain and hail storm visited the vicinity of Gresson's Landing, a few days ago, doing great damage to corn and tobacco.

THIS office acknowledges receipt of a complimentary ticket presented by the Latonia Agricultural Association to its first annual exhibition, to be held on its handsome grounds at south Covington, commencing next Tuesday and continuing five days. The list of premiums to be awarded embraces some which are very liberal, and will induce spirited contests. The speed rings will be a very interesting feature during the entire week, the purses being sufficiently large to justify the fast trotting animals for miles around to compete. The indications now are that the first exhibition will be a grand triumph.

ERRATA—We were badly off last week in our statement of the amendment to the fish law. If the amendment made by the last Legislature is held to be operative, seining is allowed only between April 1st and June 15th and September 15th and November 1st. The penalty for each violation of the law is $5. The act of the last Legislature is entitled "An Act to repeal an Act entitled 'An Act for the propagation and protection of food fish in the waters of Kentucky,'" but the act itself is an amendment to the original act, and is in conflict with its title. The constitution of the State requires that the object of an act shall be expressed in the title, and the probability is that the last act of the Legislature on the fish law, is inoperative, and the old law yet prevails.

THE news of the death of Hon. John W. Stevenson did not reach us last Tuesday evening until the forms were on the press, hence our very brief notice of the sad event.

Hon. John W. Stevenson was born in Old Virginia in May 1812, and was therefore in the 75th year of his age. At an early age he chose the law as his profession, and having thoroughly prepared himself for the practice, he located in Mississippi, but his stay there was brief. From Mississippi he came to Covington, and his superior talents soon placed him at the head of the prominent men of his city, from which place he continued his upward career, not stopping until classed as one of the principal men in the most exalted national council. His public career commenced as a member of the Covington city council, and ended as a member of the United States Senate, having filled the office of Governor of Kentucky previous to going to the Senate. Every official trust imposed upon Mr. Stevenson can be truly said to have been discharged with the greatest skill and fidelity. Mr. Stevenson was an Episcopalian, and was devoted to his church, and his many christian deeds will forever live after him. In private life he was honored and respected by all his fellow-citizens.

The [illegible] Topping [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] found that should aid in [illegible] the upper leaves of the plant will be [illegible] in the [illegible] topping [illegible] all [illegible] power to the [illegible] that [illegible] to maturity the [illegible] backward portion of the plant [illegible] in even quality the upper and lower leaves.

How to top is to be determined by the [illegible] for [illegible] which depends upon the condition of the plant fertility of the soil and the season. The temptation to top high comes from the hope of gaining weight, but this is where the greatest number of mistakes are made. If the season has been such that topping could be done early, then more leaves will mature than if the season were backward. Again from the quality of soil one field may properly mature sixteen or eighteen leaves to the stalk, while [illegible] eight or ten leaves may exhaust the soil. Low topping produces large leaves, more body and firmness, more weight, with less labor, and ripening earlier escapes the frost.

A grower urges that to give the plant the proper "spread" close attention be given to topping; that it be done when the seed buds show, and that as many leaves should be left on the stalk as the grower thinks from the quality of the soil and condition of the plant will mature. Proper topping throws the strength of the plants to the leaves, developing the top leaves to ripen with the lower ones, giving even quality and merit to the crop. After topping he says, look out for suckers, pluck them off at first sight, to give all benefit to the top leaves. Attention of this kind will show great result immediately after the crop is hung in the shed. He thinks the quality of all leaf is improved after topping it in proportion to nourishment given. Therefore, no strength must be wasted in buds or suckers. The life of the upper leaves is cut off by the stalk maturing before, but if the plant has been topped in time all will ripen alike.—Western Tobacco Journal.

As to the Outlook for the New Crop.

From our crop reports our readers can easily infer that the prospects for a large or fine crop, especially in the Leaf sections, are not very promising. It will be seen that in Virginia, North Carolina and East Tennessee, conditions are most unfavorable, and that in consequence old Tobacco of character is improving in value, and speculation is being indulged in to a considerable extent—evidence that well posted brokers, dealers and manufacturers see little prospect of anything but a small and inferior crop, especially of Bright.

In the West, while conditions are not so unfavorable as in the States before mentioned, there is nothing to warrant us in expecting even an average crop—the two last year's being far above an average—in quantity, and even worse in quality, as the early planting is buttoning low and shows narrow leaves, of poor character, and late planting is suffering quite commonly for lack of thorough cultivation and from dry weather, although the past few days have been showery throughout the Ohio Valley, more so in some sections than others. Still, owing to reduced acreage, too much rain for the early planted, and the grass and weeds in the late planted, the best that can be expected is an inferior crop.

In Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and the Connecticut Valley, Cigar Leaf has grown under very unfavorable weather conditions, but in Wisconsin dry weather has prevailed the past week, and the acreage has been so reduced, owing to low prices and by the drouth and late planting, that the prospects are decidedly in favor of a crop that will hardly be two-thirds of last year, and that will hardly yield much Wrapper Leaf.—Western Tobacco Journal.

The following from Maysville, Ky., to the Enquirer of the 14 inst., says: "Cooke Humphrey, of whom so much has been said and written in connection with the Rowan Co., troubles in this State, has been in this city continuously since last Tuesday evening, and is still here. At the late election in Morehead he voted against the further sale of liquor in that place, helping to carry local option. He thinks the local option law will be followed by good results in Morehead. When he arrived here Tuesday it was his intention to proceed on his way to Missouri the next day. There is a probability now that he will remain here and make this his home.

Col. Morrow does not claim a Republican victory in his election, but says it is due mainly to personal friendship among his Democratic acquaintances.—Somerset Reporter.

Many men voted differently from the way they originally intended. Some because they were bought, some because they were deceived, and some because their favorite had no chance of election.—Owen Democrat.

A Henderson correspondent of the Union County Local, in support of Hon. Cromwell Adair for Congress, writes: He "does not bend the knee in supple-jointed hypocracy to curry favor as a white-livered sycophant."

The tobacco crop in Robertson county will fall below the average.

In 1884 the wheat crop in Madison amounted to 163,740 bushels. In 1885 there was none. This year it is estimated that the yield will amount to 225,000 bushels.

The people of the Richmond community have been afflicted for the past week or two with an epidemic of flux. The disease is of the most virulent type, and fifty per cent. of the cases end fatally.—Bowling Green Times.

A hailstorm occurred in a portion of Webster county, literally riddling the growing crops. Whole fields of tobacco were destroyed, the leaves being torn into peices not larger than a man's hand, and corn was stripped of its blades.

Mr. Wm. A. Roberts, of Waverly neighborhood, undoubtedly has the largest crop of hay in the county. He has just finished putting up 600 tons, and for once in his life got his entire crop put away without any rain.—Union Co. Local.

The Hopkinsville South Kentuckian says G. W. Cayce, of that county, had a nine acre field of wheat, the yield from which was 525 bushels—an average of fifty-eight and one-third per acre. He sowed 25 bushels on the land.

The Misses Minnie and Emma Scott, of Bourbon county, were presented with a good-sized farm a few years ago by their father. Their success as farmers is shown by the following: They grew last year 10½ acres of tobacco, and had a yield of 19,500 pounds, which was sold at the Globe Warehouse, Cincinnati, for the handsome sum of $1,738 85.

A syndicate composed of gentlemen from Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville and Frankfort, have made a corner on all the old Kentucky whisky for sale, upon which duty has been paid, manufactured between the years 1879-82. There were about 77,000 barrels, and the syndicate has managed so quietly that they have purchased most of it without exciting suspicion.

A great many papers have published this item: "Kentucky has 600,000 children of school age, barely one-third attend school; 400,000 are being raised in ignorance and in crime." The above is false. The truth is Kentucky has 623,628 children in its public schools, each receiving $1 65 per year. But three States in the Union pay more. Almost every county has a college, seminary or high school.—C. J.

In 1875 there was inserted in the Nebraska State Constitution a provision that at the general election immediately preceding the expiration of the term of a United States Senator from that State, the electors shall, by ballot, express their preference for some person for United States Senator. Up to the present no action has been taken under that provision, but Senator Van Wyck, whose term [illegible] has determined to appeal to the people for their expression of a preference under that provision, which will be the first instance of a direct vote of the people for a United States Senator. It is supposed that the choice thus made will be binding on the Legislature as a matter of honor.

Remember that Geo. Huschart & Co. of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, can always give satisfaction both as to price and style of work, so when you want to buy a tombstone or a monument go to their yard or call on John Beall, of Hebron, agent.

J. W. Kennedy and O. M. Huey, of Normansville, were in town yesterday. Mr. Kennedy says they had fine showers the past few days, but the ground is not thoroughly wet yet. The crops are materially injured in that neighborhood by the drought.

Robert Masters, of Constance, was bailed out of jail one day last week, having served out the $50 fine imposed upon him a few weeks ago by a jury for his fourth of July escapade. His bonds are for his appearance in the circuit court to answer a couple of indictments for minor offenses.

A whiteman and a negro down on Gunpowder engaged in a theological discussion the other day, and the white man took the position that negroes had no souls; that when they died that is the last of them as it is with dumb brutes, and to sustain his arguments said:

"Why, Bird, a negro is not mentioned in the Bible."

Bird responded,—"You done 'no much 'bout scripter. Why, de Bible speaks of Nigger Demis."

The white man surrendered.

Five weeks ago yesterday Mrs. Kennedy Williams, mother of Jos. C. Revill, went to Owenton, Owen county on a visit, and on the Tuesday following she was taken suddenly and violently sick. Friday evening Mr. Revill received a telegram requesting him to [illegible] her side which he reached on Saturday. When he left for home Monday, she was some better, but by no means out of danger. The [illegible] physicians attending Mrs. Williams pronounce her disease a [illegible] form of dropsy.

Two [illegible] ago a [illegible] of Boone county is fully attested by the following statement: R. C. [illegible] of Constance, [illegible] his [illegible] of Messrs. John F. Walton and John J. Berkshire, out on the Bellevue pike. Besides the regular force of [illegible] he paid parties in the surrounding [illegible] about [illegible] bushels. He was engaged in the business at three stands about ten days and every day hauled [illegible] and often twenty-five stands of two bushels each.

The Boone County Teachers Institute convened at Morgan Academy yesterday. Owing to the rain in the forenoon the Institute was not organized until afternoon. County Superintendent, H. J. Foster, was chosen president, J. C. Mack, secretary, and A. S. Rachal, critic. The attendance was not large but the session was very interesting. The following teachers were enrolled, and many more are expected to-day:

Mrs. Bell, Misses Bettie Riley, Mamie Riggs, Annie Vest, Lucy Mulkens, Mattie Whitson, Annie Arnold, Nannie Arnold, Laura Leach, Nannie Bristow, Lillian Corbin, Virginia Southgate.

Messrs A. S. Rachal, L. M. White head, R. L. Edmonson, B. F. Bell, H. F. Gary, H. C. Snyder, Z. K. Pettit, Z. W. Connelly, D. M. Snyder, J. P. Ryle, J. C. Gordon and J. C. Mack.

Last winter the Legislature chartered the Burlington Cemetery Company, the directors named in the charter being E. H. Baker, Oscar Gaines, Lewis Conner, Richard White and Dudley Rouse. Under this charter a move is now on foot to purchase land and lay out a cemetery at this place. The following parties have agreed to take stock, $25 being a share:

E. H. Baker	$100	Dudley Rouse	$100
Oscar Gaines	100	G. T. Gaines	100
Jo C. Revill	100	Noah Craven	100
J. B. Cloud	100	Lee Gaines	100
T. D Goodridge	50	Vista Lodge
		I O O F	200

Several other parties have taken stock, while others say they will. At a meeting Monday a committee was appointed to locate the grounds, ascertain the price thereof, and learn the cost of a vault and the fencing of the cemetery. They are to report the meeting next Saturday.

Boone's Soil is the Most Productive.

Union county is now the home of one of the most prolific families on record. Many years ago John M. Thompson and his wife moved to this county from Washington county, Ky., and settled about three miles from the village of Waverly. During their residence there they became the parents of 19 children. Mrs. Thompson then died, but the old gentleman, pining for someone who could be nearer to him than his children to share the joys and sorrows of his old age, married again, and the result of the second was ten children, making 29 in all. These children soon grew to maturity, and began to increase and multiply, and now the descendants number 117. Union has long been known to possess the most productive soil in the State.—Ex.

Pshaw, that's nothing! Just listen. In 1805 Ephraim Tanner and wife, Susan, moved to this county from Virginia, at which time they had three children, which number was increased to fifteen before the father died. Mrs. Susan Tanner survived until 1870, and several years before her death but one of her children had died, and she had 116 grand children, 125 great-grand-children, and 4 great-great-grand-children, all living in this county. The lineal descendants of the above named couple are now too numerous to count, and are all as good people as can be found. Boone "has long been known to possess the most productive soil in the State."

Messrs J. C. Gordon and W. W. Gaines "took in" Niagra Falls and Toronto last week. They returned full of wonderful stories concerning the sights they saw and the acts they performed. It is well that they have a reputation for truthfulness.

An interesting game of ball was played on the Boone grounds near here last Saturday, between the Hebron club and a picked nine of this place. At first it looked as if the home club would win, but near the close of the game the visitors scored four runs, thus winning the game by two scores It was one of the most exciting games we ever witnessed. Only one error was made on the Bullittsville side while the Hebron Boys went home with a clean record.

One of natures noblemen, the handsome, astute and genial Chas. Gaines, has recently developed himself as a mimic. He can mimic most anything from the soft mellow accents of the nightingale to the mighty and the shrill echoes of Temp Graves in his harvest field. It is strange that such a wonder remained so long unknown to us. Persons wishing to get a sight of him or desiring to hear his mimicry, had better visit him at once, for Barnum will have him soon, and then you will have to pay to see him. Come right along gentlemen.

Stealing grapes is the order of the night here, as there is hardly a night but what somebody's grapes are stolen. There will be a notice in this paper ere long of a first-class funeral if it is not stopped. So boys beware, or it may be yours.

Dr. Will Terrill, of Lawrenceburg, and J. D. Terrill, removed more diseased bone from Will McWelhy's leg last Sunday, and he is now getting along very well. He has been a cripple for nearly two years, and we hope he will now get along all right.

We [illegible] the following from the Aurora, Ind., Spectator: "With all the money of relatives and indignation of apparently many leading citizens of Ripley county, and the sympathy and firm belief, apparently of friends and acquaintances in this county, the appearance is that Tom Foster, the dude horse thief [illegible] come to grief. He comes from the penitentiary on a technicality only to be confronted with additional cases of horse stealing and not only this, if there is bottom to a lengthy report in the Cincinnati Evening Telegram of Saturday evening, he was the active agent of a great horse thief association, of which Ripley county was headquarters and numerous presumed honest citizens were members.

The expose comes from Webster, who worked for Tom, and who accounts for at least [illegible] horses that the association has disposed of, some of them in these counties and even here in Aurora, but the most of them shipped to the Eastern and Southern markets. If Tom don't skip his bail he certainly has a sure thing on a return to the penitentiary, where he may conclude finally that it would have been better to have left well enough alone and remained in the first place.

The following crop report will appear in this week's Farmers' Review:

The rains during the week ending Saturday were more general throughout the corn belt than at any previous time since early in May, and brought a modicum of hope to the farmers whose corn fields were actually burning and withering. The report from correspondents during the week indicate more thoroughly than ever before that the total average yield will be seriously reduced, vast areas having been blighted beyond any power of resuscitation. Out of ninety-eight counties in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri, from which returns came during the week, only 18 predict a full average yield; thirty not to exceed one-half an average yield; ten indicate not to exceed one-fourth of a crop; twenty-six report the promise of three-fourths of an average crop, while in ten counties, corn promises a yield not to exceed five to ten bushels an acre, unless for fodder. The most discouraging reports come from Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and Missouri while the most encouraging still come from Ohio and Michigan, while Indiana and Minnesota reports continue to indicate a fair average outlook. In Illinois, this week, the only county reporting the promise of a full average yield is Edgar, while Jasper, Dewitt and Morgan report the promise of three fourths of an average yield. In Bond and McHenry counties, one-fourth of an average yield is indicated.

Throughout Illinois complaints continue of pastures completely drying up. Late planted potatoes are generally a failure. In Iowa, Humboldt is the only county indicating an average yield, and the State at large will not exceed 50 to 60 percent of an average yield. In Decatur and Carroll counties the crop is set down as a failure. Wheat is threshing out very unevenly, but the grain is grading well. The yield ranges from eight to twenty bushels. In Kansas, Osborn and Norton counties a promise of a full average yield is reported. The State at large promises from 75 to 80 per cent. of an average yield. Fruit is abundant throughout the State.

In Missouri, the general outlook is regarded as very poor. Marion, Osage, Ralls and St. Charles counties report almost total crop failures. Nebraska reports three-fourths of an average, with continued good weather conditions.

The threshing reports from Dakota show a yield from five to eighteen bushels. The yield of the territory will fall considerably short of any former yearly average.

We take the liberty of reminding all lovers of fun, and all admirers of ennobling drama well presented, of a present opportunity for enjoying the one and of seeing the other, by attending the Morgan Academy Entertainments as per announcements. There are bits of acting from amateurs that would do great credit to professionals; and then the whole proceeds go towards permanently improving the Academy, a county institution in which we are all interested. A very liberal patronage should be granted the players, for the plays and objects are excellent and commendable, so says a spectator at rehearsals.

A Good Chance.

HON. REUBEN CONNER: Dear Sir—

I will receive and admit to free tuition in the State College of Kentucky, on your certificate of appointment, three young men from your district, properly prepared. On page 27 of the catalogue herewith sent, you will find the qualifications for admission into the Preparatory Department. On page 27 a close estimate of expenses. Send none but good, moral, steady young men. Yours Truly,

UNION, KY., August 10, 1886.

To the Public: As certain scandelous reports are in circulation concerning me and Mrs. B. F. Crisler, I take this method of informing the public that said reports are without fundation or at least I can not find any one that say said reports is so. Mr. B. F. Crisler in the presence of Mr. P. A. Weaver and Mrs. Lucinda Weaver denies ever having said anything of the kind. Now I have this much to say: Said report is an infamous lie, and has been started to hide the infernal meanness of another or to injure me. Now, said reports must be settled up if ever I can find out who is responsible for it, that is if the laws of this Commonwealth will protect me. BOB R. HOUSTON.

WILL SHOW UP.

A Prominent Citizen Contemplates a Surprise for Chicago Detectives.

"I'm going to Chicago to show myself," said a conspicuous, talkative passenger to a crowd of listeners in the smoking car. What for? Well, I'll tell you. 'Tain't because I'm proud of my personal appearance, though folks do say I'm a man that's likely to attract attention in a crowd. You see, there's five or six men up in Chicago who have been looking for me for a month, at least, so I have heard. Why they haven't found me is more than I can imagine. I live only fifty miles from Chicago, in a right smart of a town. I'm quite a prominent citizen, too. There ain't nobody down my way that don't know me. My name is frequently in the papers. There isn't a conductor or brakeman on the railroad who doesn't know me by sight, and most of 'em to talk to. Yet these Chicago fellows haven't been able to find me. I haven't any idea on earth what they want to see me about, but I'm going up to Chicago to show myself just for fun."

"Who are these fellows who have been looking for you?"

"City hall detectives."—Chicago Herald.

RACHEL'S CUPIDITY.

How the Great Jewish Actress Solicited Valuable Gifts.

Rachel, the famous tragedienne, was as avaricious as she was gifted. On one occasion she was invited to dine at the house of a wealthy Parisian who worshipped her genius. Observing a magnificent boquet of flowers that adorned the center of the table she exclaimed: "How lovely!"

"Pardon, mademoiselle," said her host with true French gallantry, "permettez moi de vous presenter cela," at the same time lifting the flowers out of the massive silver vase in which they rested.

"But, monsieur," said Rachel, "'twas the vase that I admired."

"Parfaitment, c'est a vous aussi, (this is yours also)" said the ever-polite host.

When the repast was finished she asked her friend to send her home in his own carriage, as she was afraid some one might rob her of her silver vase if she returned in a public cab.

He assented readily, but as he handed her into the vehicle he said imploringly: "You will at least return my carriage, will you not, mademoiselle?"

It may be presumed that the coach came back.—Texas Siftings.

A New Sort of Engineer.

Mrs. Bagley—Who was that young man we met yesterday at the Academy of Fine Arts, William?

Bagley—That was Ironhead, of Chicago. He is a civil engineer.

Mrs. B. (with asperity)—I don't think he is, William.

Bagley—Why, Clara, I have known him for five years——

Mrs. B. (decisively)—Pardon me, William, but I know better. In the course of fifteen minutes' conversation he contradicted me at least four times. If that wasn't incivility, what was it?—Philadelphia Call.

—"Say, conductor, aren't we running about twice as fast as usual?" "Yes." "I guess we're going down hill?" "No." "Wind changed and helping us along, perhaps?" "I guess not. The fact is, we've sighted a man walking about a mile ahead on the track, and I'm going to catch him and make him get on and pay his fare if I run the wheels off. The rules forbid any man trying to beat the company this way."—N. Y. Herald.

—"Dear, dear," said Mrs. McGudley, looking over the top of her glasses, "here's a piece in this paper all about the horrible things done by the Blackfeet Indians. I should think the Government could send them soup and make them wash their feet any how."—Chicago Ledger.

THE COMBINATION
FENCE.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

RUSSIAN MARRIAGES.

The Good Wife Must Be a Smart Field Hand.

The Model Husband Should Show His "Authority"—Hunting for a Bride—Sad Scenes at the Wedding—To Work, at Once.

"It is not the walls that adorn the hut, but its contents," says a Russian proverb, which, simple though it is, implies a great philosophical and practical truth. The constant pressure of every-day necessities on the one hand and its direct result, the absence of higher interest and purposes in life, on the other, sufficiently account for the peasant being cool, calm and reserved, even on occasions when people of a higher civilization would undoubtedly display their better and softer natures. In selecting a "companion for life" the Russian parobok (young fellow) is generally guided by the advice of his parents, or elders, and by the conventional standard of what a peasant's wife should be. According to his ideal she must, in the first place, be of a strong and hearty constitution, not afraid of hard work, willing, industrious—in short, in every regard fulfill the hard duties which her future home may impose upon her. In the second place, she is supposed to become absolutely the slave of her husband. Whatever the lord-husband decides upon the slave-wife must consent to, else ill-treatment in its various brutal forms is sure to follow the poor woman till death puts an end to her wretched life.

"A pretty face is a matter of secondary or no importance whatever to the peasant, who, using his own words, is 'not to put his wife on the market for sale.' The promptness with which a girl binds the sheaves in the field is sufficient to enchant the wealthiest of the peasants in the village. It wins her a good many admirers among the paroboks, even of the surrounding villages. Such a girl, ugly though she may be, stands good chances of making a profitable and advantageous match—that is, of securing a home where she is sure that fresh rye bread, borsch, salt pork and such like delicacies will always adorn her table. A comparatively well-to-do peasant is often seen to marry a poor and rather ugly girl because the latter answers the ideal standard.

When once a parobok—with his parents' consent, of course, has made up his mind to marry a certain girl nothing can make him go back on his decision. Disregarding any obstacles that may be in his way, he is as firm as a rock in carrying out his purpose. Whenever an opportunity of seeing the sweet object offers itself to him it is generally taken advantage of, and thus something like a courtship springs up between the young lovers. This, however, is of no long duration, and is of the simplest character. The parobok frequently visits his dyevka, but this is generally done when the parents of the latter are in the land of dreams. A stable or a pig-shed, a corner of which is often found to be occupied by a peasant girl as a summer residence, answers the purpose of a reception room or a parlor. It is there, in that improvised parlor, where young lovers reveal their hearts to each other. It is there, amid the darkness and silence of the night, with nothing to be seen and nothing to be heard, except possibly the snorting of a pig, which, upon such an occasion, falls like the sweet sound of music upon the ears of those engaged in amorous conversations, it is there that a peasant may for once in his life feel inspired. Indeed, that disagreeable and apparently inconsequental snorting of the pig is often a source of great pleasure and inspiration for the peasant. It is, in its way, an aria, which often reminds him of days gone by, an aria which fills his heart with hope and glory for the future! But here, too, practical talk about every day rural life predominates. The discussion of a day's work, or the good or bad qualities of a horse, a cow, a pig, and so on, is not at all unlikely to be the topic of conversation between lovers. When once the momentary inspiration has vanished, neither a word, nor an expression in the face of either the parobok or the the girl signifies any thing beyond the ordinary dry transaction of practical business.

As the reader can see for himself, the peasant enters the bonds of matrimony for no other reason on earth but that of securing a hard-working slave. But a few wise sayings of his own will illustrate his views of married life more forcibly than mere description: "A hard-working wife is like a good milking cow; one supplies with milk, the other with linen." "A disobedient wife is like a wild horse; the more lashes she gets the tamer she becomes." "To love a wife is to strike her upon every suitable occasion." And to strike a wife upon every suitable occasion, almost on the day after marrying her, is indeed no novelty among the peasantry. I remember a case where a peasant nearly choked his wife to death in his desperate anger because she allowed herself, after a year's hard saving, to buy some calico for a Sunday dress. I know an old couple, parents of a number of grown-up children, who at certain seasons in the year, as regularly as clock-work, are intoxicated. Every thing that is found in the house is taken to the tavern and exchanged for vodka, and thus by the time they begin to realize their horrid position, a good portion of linen, grain, flour and eggs is gone. The husband's anger then knows no limits, and the poor feeble wife, who probably is the least to blame, suffers from her lord all insults imaginable. I know a quiet and peaceful young peasant who after being constantly ridiculed by his comrades for being too lenient with his wife, for allowing her to have too much to say, slapped her face upon one solemn occasion in the presence of his friends merely for the sake of denying this degrading accusation and establishing his reputation as her master. Such is the lot of a peasant woman. She is perfectly aware of the ill treatment awaiting her in her future home, yet she is satisfied and resigned to her fate.

Oftentimes, however, it happens that a peasant marries a girl without having the faintest idea of the girl's character, but almost without having had a chance to exchange a few words with her. This is generally done at the time when for some reason or other there is no possibility of marrying any of the girls of his own village, and when marry he must. On a fine morning the bridegroom, dressed up in his best woolen svita, with the brightest red colored belt, high sheepskin hat and newest of boots, may be seen proudly starting out in company with a few elderly and experienced peasants engaged for the purpose by the bridegroom's parents, in search of a good girl. No house containing a girl is passed by.

Upon entering the house the wife-hunting party say a few words of customary salutation, such as "health be to you, good people," and immediately, without beating around the bush, approach the subject. This business-like transaction, it is worth while mentioning, is often carried on in the absence of the girl directly concerned in the matter. The bridegroom upon such occasions is supposed to have but little or nothing to say. The conversation is carried on between the parents of the girl and those entrusted with this important mission. If the girl's parents, for some reason or other do not intend to let their child be married at present the guests are politely told so, and after inquiring if there are any suitable girls in that immediate neighborhood they leave the house. As a general thing, however, the party experiences no difficulty in obtaining the object desired. After the parents have decided the girl is summoned at once, and here frequently ensues a scene worthy of an artist's brush. She takes her place by the stove and without lifting her eyes, biting her nails and assuming the most innocent face, frequently keeps the party waiting for a long while before the laconic "yes" (da) is extorted from her. There is hardly need of adding that when once the parents' decision is made no prayers or tears on the girl's part can alter it. A rope and strap brings the most stubborn tchado to terms.

As soon as the busy season is over the marriage season takes its place. It generally lasts from the middle of September till late in November. The young folks begin to prepare themselves for the approaching festivities. Women have their hands full in preparing various fancy baked dishes and other things suitable upon such occasions—men in bottling the vodka, engaging musicians and working about the house. The village, which only a few weeks ago looked as though it were forsaken, assumes now a gay and lively appearance. Every villager is now more or less in a state of excitement. But here the bride, dressed in a brocaded short skirt with half a dozen folds, in a charming long or sleeveless garment called korsyet, her hair full of bright and streaming ribbons and flowers, starts out, accompanied by her girl friend, called druzhka, to invite her relatives and friends to the wedding. Every one she meets, whether friend or stranger, is greeted with a bow nearly to the ground. That means "You are welcome, good people, to attend my wedding." Very often I used to avail myself of such opportunities. What interested me most the first time I attended a peasant's wedding was the sight of the lively crowd that surrounded the izba (hut) where the wedding took place. The gloomy and stern expression so natural to the peasant it seemed to me was changed to one of joy and happiness. No uproar, no strong language, in short, not the least sign of any thing rough could be noticed in the lively crowd; all behaved in a manner worthy of people of a higher standard of culture. The bride's father, who, upon such occasions is called svat by every body, passed around the crowd and treated all who were present as well as he could from a large bottle of vodka and a wooden dish full of slices of wheat bread, which answered the purpose of wedding cake. Wishes for the prosperity of the newly-married couple, of the parents of the bride, bridegroom and of all good people in general, as well as for the eternal peace of the dead, were heard upon all sides.

But here the ringing of a bell somewhat startled the crowd. "Ah, the bridegroom!" A few moments later three wagons, each with a troika, or span of three horses, stopped in front of the gate. As the bridegroom, accompanied by his parents and relatives, was about to enter the yard a number of paroboks, with a long rope in their hands, placed themselves on each side of the gate, thus signifying that not unless a ransom for the bride was paid would the party be allowed to enter. An offer of a tchetvert (gallon) of vodka was made, but this they declined to accept. One gallon more brought the paroboks to terms, and the bridegroom, led by his father and one of his relatives, entered the gate with triumph. After some difficulty, by closely following the bridal party, I succeeded in gaining entrance into the izba. The first sight that met my eyes was the bride sitting at the head of the table surrounded by her maiden friends and weeping bitterly, while the latter sang:

"Farewell, sister;
Thy new home expects thee.
Farewell, sister, farewell."

It was a moment of both solemn sorrow and glory. The bridegroom was soon placed by the right hand of his sweetheart. After a round treat was made and some fellow, an improvised speaker, "made up a speech," one of the bride's brothers, a young boy of fifteen, bent her head and, with a pair of shears in his hand, threatened to cut off her locks. Another ransom of five or ten kopeks was offered and thus the bride's beautiful locks were spared.

The crowd at the same time amused themselves in the yard. The musicians, an old blind fiddler and two young fellows with drum and cymbals, were hard at work. The red-cheeked dyevkas, attired in their bright skirts and ribbons, as well as the paroboks in their Sunday svitas, kept on dancing and jumping till a very late hour in the night. Vodka was occasionally served and thus little by little the happy and glorious time of the old zaporog Cossacks began to arise before me. But time of parting came at last and the crowd dispersed apparently in the best of humor. Now and then, amid the deep silence of the night, a few words of cheer concerning the wedding or a scrap of song were still heard from various parts of the small village.

On the following day the young couple, accompanied by some of their friends and relatives, start out to pay short visits to various friends in the village, where some scanty wedding presents are collected at the same time. After this is done all return to the home of the bride's parents, where an epicurean dinner, consisting of borshch with pork, is waiting for them. Then follows the scene of the bride's taking her leave of her parents, brothers, sisters and some girl friends, who come to see her off. This is one of the most touching scenes that I ever witnessed. The young couple standing in the middle of the room, with their heads bent, receive the blessing from the bride's parents. Upon such an occasion the bride, of course, is not able to control her tears, which flow like a stream from her eyes, and the bridegroom looks pale and is apparently touched. Towards evening the bride may be seen on her way to her new home, where some domestic duty, such as milking the cow, may expect her that very evening.—S. S. Skidelsky in Philadelphia Times.

A PROOF BY FIGURES.

The Success of Postmaster-General Vilas' Administration Demonstrated by Cold Facts.

The annual financial statements of the post-office make a showing that must be extremely satisfactory to the Administration and its friends. Since the new Administration came in all contracts for adhesive stamps, postal cards, stamped envelopes and wrappers, and mail bags and mail bag catchers, running four years, have been let at rates that for the whole contract term on estimated quantities would come to $[illegible]. At the prices of the former contracts these articles would cost $6,744,938. Here is a saving for the four years of $1,846,[illegible], or 19.6 per cent. The four classes of articles enumerated above, and the official envelopes, tags, etc., wrapping paper, facing slips, twine, marking and rating stamps, letter balances and stationery, which are contracted for annually, cost for the fiscal year, under contracts made since Postmaster-General Vilas took office, $706,861. The same quantities under the contracts existing March 4, 1885, would have cost $881,083. Here is an annual saving of $174,222, or 19.7 per cent. For the miscellaneous expenses of the department, exclusive of salaries, the appropriation for 1886 was $138,852, the expenditures were $89,836, and the unexpended balance was $49,015. For 1885 the appropriation was $127,919, the expenditures $118,381, and the unexpended balance only $9,357. The decrease of the miscellaneous expenses for the year was $28,584, or 24 per cent. Among the items of supplies above mentioned the only one which does not show a decrease in the cost was that of letter-balances. That shows an increase of 75 per cent. The reason of this apparent increase was that the figures of the previous year were false. Two years ago an excessive number of balances were bought by the department at unusually high figures. The next year—that is 1885—the contractors, knowing that the purchases in 1884 were so large that no more would be needed for some time, put in their bid at nominal figures, and the department bought no scales. The division chief who stocked up the department for two or three years ahead with balances at high figures is not now in office. For salaries the appropriation for 1884 was a little larger than for 1885. But in 1884 the unexpended balance for salaries was $17,000, and for 1885 it was $6,000. Although, as shown above, the miscellaneous expenses of the department for 1886 were $28,000 less than in 1885, the expenditures of 1886 covered a number of items, aggregating nearly $7,000, mainly connected with the leasing of a building for the sixth auditor's clerks, that were not included in the expenditures for 1885.

The expenditures of the Post-office Department not regulated by law—that is, discretionary with the Postmaster-General, but exclusive of the transportation of mails—have for twenty years been used up with the exception of an average annual unexpended balance of 1.6 per cent. In 1886 the unexpended balance was 6.8 per cent. For twenty years the average annual increase of these expenses has been 5.5 per cent.; last year the increase was only 1.7 per cent. Since the new Administration came in the net reduction of star-route service has been at the rate of $316,973 a year; of steamboat service, $139,506, and of mail messenger service, $45,591—a total net decrease at the rate of $501,785 per annum. On payment for railroad service there has been cut off $12,950 as needless, $68,905 of compensation to land-grant roads which were previously not classified as such, $80,161 disallowances of pay for department car service hitherto allowed but not authorized by law, and $10,500 of postal-car service discontinued as unnecessary—a total saving on railway transportation at the rate of $172,517. For purposes of contracting for star-route and steamboat transportion the United States is divided into four sections. Contracts for four years in the fourth section, including States and Territories west of the Mississippi and the Missouri, were let at the rate of $289,000 a year less than the previous contracts. The original estimates for postal service for 1886 were $56,000,000, and the appropriations were $54,000,000.

The Postmaster-General's estimate last fall for the then current year was $53,000,000. The actual expenditure, as indicated by the auditors' reports for three-fourths of the year, will come inside of $51,000,000. The revenue will be $44,000,000, so the deficit will come inside of $7,000,000, instead of reaching $9,000,000, and this in spite of a loss of over $1,000,000 by reducing newspaper postage one-half and some reduction of revenue by increasing the unit of weight on letters from one-half to one ounce.—Chicago Times.

——Mr. Cleveland's general order to the Federal office-holders is given at the right time, and expressed in the right way. There is no doubt that a good many office-holders believe that their official duties are the least onerous part of their labors. For instance, more than one-half the delegates to the last Republican State convention held in Texas were Federal office-holders, and the other half were led by the office-holders like a flock of sheep. As Mr. Cleveland properly observes, office-holders are the agents of the people and not their masters. They have no ordained right to run caucuses and conventions, or pull the wires for those who were instrumental in securing their appointment. Congressmen who labored night and day with the President and his Cabinet officers to secure the appointment of their friends to office, with the expectation that when the re-election season came around the office-holders would do some fine work for them, will no doubt be disappointed and displeased at the President's order. But public office is a public trust, and public officers should not make themselves offensive in pulling for this or that candidate. Revenue collectors, customs collectors, postmasters, United States attorneys and United States marshals should be taught that the people can elect their Congressmen without any powerful assistance from them.—Galveston News.

——"Bill" Chandler has been in political retirement for some time past, but he emerged at the meeting of the New Hampshire Republican State Committee when he made a speech upon the approaching campaign. The most noteworthy thing he said was this: "If we expect to get the Republicans back into power in the Nation, we must show to the country that it is a better party than the Democratic." It does not appear, however, to have occurred to him that it may be difficult to show this as long as he is himself a prominent figure in the Republican party.—N. Y. Post.

——The slowness of Mr. Cleveland's Administration in making changes in the offices, which has provoked, and which continues to provoke, criticism among Democrats who have not arrived at full sympathy with the spirit of the new order of things, is yet more noteworthy because of the fact, everywhere recognized, that under his predecessors the post-office has been regarded as the nucleus of the local party organization, and that the service has, from time immemorial, been filled with party workers whose first duty has been party work.—Boston Statesman.

USING THE VETERANS.

The Queer Way in Which the Administration Has Shown a "Revengeful Spirit" Toward Union Soldiers.

The opposition to the President's vetoes of private pension bills is another form of the effort to use the veterans to gain a party advantage. The vetoes are represented as proofs of a revengeful spirit toward Union soldiers for saving the country and the attempts to insinuate or to declare this wretched calumny are utterly contemptible and unworthy of the Republican name. The President with dignity and truthfulness says what every honorable and patriotic American citizen will approve:

"The blatant and noisy self-assertion of those who from motives that may well be suspected declare themselves above all others friends of the soldiers can not discredit nor belittle the calm, steady and affectionate regard of a grateful nation."

The President points out that an appropriation of seventy-six millions of dollars has just been made for pensions under liberal laws to meet every meritorious case, and that more than a million of dollars was added to maintain the Pension Bureau. The rate of pension in certain cases has been increased, and large appropriations have been made for homes for sick, disabled and needy soldiers, and there is a recent liberal grant for their enlargement and greater convenience. All this, as he says, is no more than should be done.

Besides this is the fact, which he does not mention, that the committee of the Democratic House has reported favorably six hundred private pension bills, against four hundred reported by the committee of the late Republican House; that many were rejected as utterly undeserving, showing how great is the pressure of unfounded claims; and that of the six hundred the President has vetoed but ninety, most of which had been rejected by a Republican Commissioner of Pensions. Thus while President Cleveland has signed more than five hundred pension bills in sixteen months, General Grant approved only five hundred and forty-two in the eight years of his Administration. Such facts dispose effectually of the unworthy partisan assaults upon President Cleveland as hostile to the soldiers.—Harper's Weekly.

A DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT.

Another Instance in Which the Chief Executive, in the Cause of Honesty and Justice, Uprooted a Venerable Republican Custom.

Under Republican Administrations the habit grew of rushing bills through by the hundreds during the last two or three hours of a Congressional session. Scores of bills which could not bear the light of day were held back to those last moments, when the rush was so great as to prevent examination. Many even of the appropriation bills were so retarded that some of their clauses might not meet with careful inspection. In the last hours of the session the President was brought down to the capitol, and sat there signing bills as fast as he could write, without any opportunity for intelligently considering the measures which he was thus supposed to approve. Such was for a quarter of a century the Republican practice.

We have now, for the first time in a generation, a Democratic President, and he has sufficient respect for his position to formally notify Congress that his Executive approval will not be appended to any bills in any such fashion. He recognizes that the constitution makes him a part of the law-making power. He does not propose to sign any measure, whether an appropriation bill or a private bill, until he has had time to carefully examine it, and to make up his mind upon its merits.

President Cleveland, this country will stand by you to a man in that position. The only kickers will be the hired lobby, the Congressional jobbers and the beneficiaries of public steals. Your friends pray most earnestly that you will not budge an inch from this position. If necessary to sustain it, you should smash every appropriation bill that is left. It requires heroic treatment to cure such a cancer as has fastened, in this respect, upon our Nation. If it is necessary to kill every one of the bills of the closing hours, and to call an extra session of Congress to pass necessary measures, in order to establish this principle, the country will sustain it.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Proud "Cheese Parer."

No account of the Democratic leaders of the House would possibly be complete without including a sketch of the old watch dog of the treasury, William Steele Holman, of Indiana. Beginning his service with the Thirty-sixth Congress, he served through all the stormy period of the rebellion as a war Democrat, the friend of Lincoln and Stanton, and the steadfast champion of the Union cause. It is the fashion of reckless statesmen of easy virtue and extravagant notions to sneer at Holman as a cheese parer and picayune economist. Mr. Holman accepts the epithets good naturedly. He says he is a cheese parer. Experience has taught him that money is not saved to the Government by striking off a million here and there, but by reducing the multitude of small items that amount to millions in the aggregate. Vice-President Hendricks never said a truer word than that Holman was worth $25,000,000 a year to the treasury as long as he stayed in Congress. He bids fair to stay a great many years yet. He has just been renominated for the twelfth time, and will be elected, of course. Mr. Holman is not one of the orators of Congress. His voice is thin and high-pitched, and not strong in tone. He can not be heard across the chamber. He stands at his desk when talking, and nervously twirls his spectacles by way of gesture. He never speaks unless he has something to say, and the members always cluster about him to catch every word, for they know that it is ten to one he is going to expose some bit of jobbery in an appropriation bill. Mr. Holman is sixty-four years of age, spare and lean. His thin, dark brown hair is liberally streaked with gray, and the stubby bit of beard on his chin is grayer still. His eyes are small and deep sunken; his cheek bones high and prominent. He chews tobacco incessantly. He dresses plainly. At this season of year he wears an alapaca coat and dark trousers. He wears an old-fashioned standing collar, with black stock, and altogether is a very good type of the Indiana statesman of the old school. He is a close attendant on these closing days of the session, and woe to the jobber who presumes to launch his little scheme any of these warm afternoons on the supposition that the old man is asleep.—N. Y. Sun.

——Mr. Matthews, the colored Democrat whose nomination for Fred Douglass' place was rejected by the Senate, says he was told that he would be confirmed if he would promise not to remove any of the present attaches of the office, but that refusing to commit himself on this point the Republican Senators voted unanimously against him. It would be interesting if Mr. Matthews would give the names of the persons who gave these assurances to him. We can hardly think a dignified United States Senator would descend to such petty dickering, but even Senators have been known to do some exceedingly petty things in politics.—Chicago News.

LAMENESS IN ANIMALS.

The Proper Way of Diagnosing and Treating This Affliction.

Lameness is not of itself a disease, but a sign of it, and it is a manifestation by one or more of the limbs, of pain, weakness, inability or impediment. It is the expression of pain or inability, the result of disease, accident or malformation in the limb or limbs by which it is manifested. It may, however, arise from disease apart from the limbs, as in case of liver and spinal disease. It may exist for a short time independent of disease, but if it lasts, disease is sure to follow. Disease much oftener exists in a limb without lameness than lameness without disease. We may have mechanical lameness, as in cases of complete anchylosis, without pain, and the same may be said in case of dislocation of the patella.

Although pain may be said to be the common cause of lameness, the animal feels the pain either when it moves the limb or presses weight upon it. Weakness may cause an inability to perform the function of progression properly. A horse may be lame from cramp caused by excess of tonicity of the muscles of a limb, which renders him for time being "dead lame." It is possible to have great lameness from plugging of the arteries with a fibrinous clot. In those cases I find the leg deathly cold and the animal may start out to all appearances well, but after going a quarter of a mile will pull up dead lame.

The slow trot is the best gait to diagnose lameness at. If the lameness be in the fore limb, the head and shoulder are raised off from the lame one and dropped onto the sound side. If the lameness be in the hind limb, the quarter of the same side is elevated, and that of the sound one thrown well forward and downward by a jerking motion. A close inspection while standing still is wise in locating lameness. As a rule, when a horse walks lame he trots very lame. Some walk sound and trot very lame, as in case of splint lameness.

Lameness may be caused by a strain of a ligament, muscular tissue, tendons, fractures, diseased bones, cartilage, morbid conditions of the skin, tumors, plugging of the arteries, accidents such as pricks in shoeing, treads, wounds, ulcers, rheumatism, a reflex nervous action, as in disease of the liver.

Strains of the muscles are of little consequence, when compared with strains of the tendons and ligaments. Muscles are liable to become deranged in their functions, either by an exaltation or depression of their constructile power, and these conditions are generally exhibited in the musles of the lumbar ventral and femoral regions. Functional irregularity of muscles may arise from granular degeneration of the muscles without any disease being found in the nerves or nerve centers.

The treatment for strain of the muscles exists in repose, soothing applications succeeded by slight and afterward stronger and more active counter-irritants. After the acute inflammation passes off, that is succeeded by atrophy, the animal showing some signs of weakness and inability, but this condition will soon pass away and the muscles regain their normal tone. The most serious cases of strain we meet with are of the flexor tendons, suspensory ligaments and the ligaments of the lower joints. Injuries of this kind are very common among horses used for fast work, both trotting and running. The treatment in such cases is often very unsatisfactory. The first and most important thing to do, if occurring in hot weather, is to constantly use cold applications until most of the inflammation is subdued. If occurring in the colder months of the year, I think hot water preferable to cold. One danger, however, in using hot water is its relaxing tendency. After all inflammation is subdued apply a good active blister of cantharides and biniodide of mercury, and the best method I believe is to make an application twice a day for a few days until such time as the parts are thoroughly counter-irritated. I have also found glycerine a much better remedy to apply to the blistered parts than lard and heavier fats and oils. After all the scabs and insensitive skin is removed, commence the hand-rubbing process, using glycerine and iodine three times a day. I believe if such treatment be followed up, the actual cautery can be dispensed with in many cases.—Dr. Fair, in Ohio Farmer.

EMPEROR WILLIAM.

How the Venerable German Monarch Spends His Days.

Emperor William does not smoke nor take snuff. Neither does he wear spectacles. When reading or writing he uses an eye glass, although he does not wish to admit that his eye-sight is growing weak. His Majesty sleeps as soundly as the healthiest of youths, and never takes a rest during the course of the day. He always receives standing up in his salon after having changed his old uniform for a more correct one. Should he receive a Prince who has conferred on him the purely honorary command of a regiment that bears his name, His Majesty always wears the uniform of that particular regiment. In this respect there is never the slightest derogation from the rigid rule of etiquette. Hence His Majesty has frequently to change his uniform three or four times within an hour or two.

The Emperor was always distinguished for his exquisite courtesy and gallantry. And now, although ninety years of age, he bestows upon the Empress the most delicate attentions. He loves to go and spend an hour at the opera, which is quite near, but he never disposes of his time during the evenings without first consulting the Empress. Every evening they take tea together, and the Emperor is never absent without first acquainting the Empress of his intention, and receiving her permission. It is during dinner, which takes place at six o'clock, that his Majesty decides as to how he shall spend the evening. These dinners are of the simplest kind, never more than three courses and the repast rarely lasts more than half an hour.

When the Emperor receives permission to pass the evening in his own way, he may be seen at the opera, not in the grand reception box, which occupies all the center of the hall, but in an avant scene of the first story, where, near the actors, he can see better, and catch every word. The official box is filled with chamberlains in grand tenue, officers in brilliant uniforms and ladies of the palace in gorgeous toilet, while the Emperor himself in his plain uniform bows and smiles to the aristocratic ladies and distinguished dames in the body of the house. When the play is over, which is generally a little after nine o'clock, his Majesty returns to the palace, he takes a cup of tea, and at ten o'clock, if more important receptions do not retain him in the apartments of the Empress, he retires to rest like a simple workman, satisfied with his day's toil, and ready to resume it again on the following morning.—Brooklyn Magazine.

THE PRESSING SYSTEM.

Circumstances Under Which It Was Practiced in England.

In 1770 parish constables were ordered to press all men having no visible means of subsistence, and were paid twenty shillings a head for each man delivered in Mark lane. Toward the close of the year a person brought before Wilkes, as the sitting alderman, was by him discharged, Wilkes declaring pressing to be illegal. This led to friction with the Admiralty and to debate in the Common Council, where, when attacked by Wilkes and his supporters, the Lord Mayor could only plead that he had but followed the example of his predecessors in backing the warrants. No practical result followed, but it was a sign of the times. At this date there were from four to five thousand men engaged in executing the warrants, and it was computed that each man caught by them cost the country thirty pounds. The story of one of the victims snatched away about this time has indirectly, been rendered classical by Charles Dickens, who, in speaking of the satanic penal code of the era, in the preface to "Barnaby Rudge," alludes to the case of Mary Jones. This woman's husband was a tradesman earning a fair livelihood, when he was waylaid and seized by a press-gang and sent to sea. Within a few weeks the home was broken up and she and her two children were turned into the streets, where they starved, until maddened by her babies' hunger, "she went to a linen draper's shop, took some coarse linen off the counter and slipped it under her cloak; the shopman saw her and she laid it down; for this she was hanged." Mr. Dickens goes on to wonder whether these facts "afforded as much entertainment to the merry gentlemen of the House of Commons," who, according to Sergeant Foster, were the "wisdom of the nation," as did some similar circumstances related to them by Sir Samuel Romilly.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

Murat Halstead Offers John R. McLean Satisfaction on the Field of Honor, Which He Promptly Declined.

Roger A. Pryor, the Noted Duelist of the South, Acts for McLean, and Colonel W. G. Terrell for Halstead—McLean Disclaims All Responsibility for the Offensive Charges—T. T. Campbell Assumes the Authorship of the Offensive Article.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Before leaving Cincinnati last week Murat Halstead communicated with Colonel W. G. Terrell, of Washington, and requested his presence in New York. On the arrival of Terrell he was requested by Halstead to proceed to the Saratoga residence of J. R. McLean on the mission indicated in the following note of authorization:

NEW YORK OFFICE
CINCINNATI COMMERCIAL,
August 11, 1886.

Colonel W. G. Terrell is authorized to represent me in the matter of settlement with John R. McLean. M. HALSTEAD.

Inclosed in this was the following note addressed to McLean, to be used at the discretion of Colonel Terrell:

NEW YORK OFFICE
CINCINNATI COMMERCIAL,
NEW YORK, Aug. 11, 1886.

JOHN R. McLEAN: An evening paper of Cincinnati in the hands of your friends has recently asserted in your behalf certain responsibilities, and Colonel W. G. Terrell, of Kentucky, Colonel Terrell's former home, is informed, as far as is needful in action, of details, and authorized to act for me.
M. HALSTEAD.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 14, 1886.
JOHN R. McLEAN—Dear Sir: I am here at the Windsor Hotel, Room No. 28, on a matter of business for Murat Halstead, of Cincinnati, which concerns you, and wish to communicate with you as to particulars. I will be glad to hear from you personally or through a friend. I am, sir,
W. G. TERRELL.

SARATOGA, Aug. 15, 1886.
W. G. TERRELL, ESQ.—Dear Sir: Your note of this morning received. As I can not conceive of any business that can be arranged by the intervention of yourself or any one else between Halstead and myself, I beg leave to decline the request of your note above referred to—to meet you personally or through any one. J. R. McLEAN.

SARATOGA, August 15, 1886.
SIR: Your note of this date received. I can not be any more explicit than to say that the business referred to in my note of yesterday relates to your personal differences with M. Halstead, in the settlement of which, as proposed by him, I am empowered to act on his behalf. With this explanation, further answer to my former note is required. Respectfully,
W. G. TERRELL.

SARATOGA, Aug. 16, 1886.
WM. G. TERRELL, ESQ.—Sir: Your note of yesterday received. Being here without a confidential friend, I have been compelled to send for one. He will be here within thirty hours. I will defer further communications until his arrival. Respectfully,
J. R. McLEAN.

WINDSOR HOTEL, SARATOGA,
Aug. 16, 1886.
JOHN R. McLEAN, ESQ.—Sir: Yours of this date just received. I will go to New York this afternoon (4 p. m.) returning to-morrow at 9:50 p. m., and can then be addressed at the Windsor. I am, etc., W. G. TERRELL.

In New York, on the 17th, Terrell received from Halstead a memorandum, saying:

"So far as McLean as a public man and conductor of a newspaper is concerned I claim to be even with him and more in the Commercial, but I find him quoted by enemies who assert certain responsibilities for him, and it is of these I speak, and that I have explained to Terrell, as no friend, and McLean well knows precisely what they are, and why he is called for." On his return to Saratoga Terrell received the following from Mr. McLean.

SARATOGA, Aug. 18, 1886.
WM. G. TERRELL, ESQ.—Sir: The bearer, General Roger A. Pryor, is fully accredited and authorized on my behalf to receive and discuss any communication from you with a view to a settlement of the differences between Halstead and myself.
Respectfully, J. R. McLEAN.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, Aug. 18, 1886.
GENERAL ROGER A. PRYOR—My Dear Sir: Referring to Mr. McLean's note of this date, delivered to me by you, and to our subsequent conversation in connection therewith, I have this to say: Mr. Halstead does not complain of any thing said of him personally in the columns of the Cincinnati Enquirer. He admits that he has retaliated in kind, and that he is satisfied on that account. But he does complain that a newspaper printed in Cincinnati, and understood to be partially owned by McLean and published in his interest, has attacked him in a manner so offensive as to require other notice than that he has usually prescribed for himself in controversies. These attacks wantonly, gratuitously and falsely affect innocent persons dependent upon him for protection. To this he will not submit. He expects from McLean absolute disavowal of his knowledge of, and his responsibility for, these publications, and his assurance that they shall not be repeated.
W. G. TERRELL.

UNITED STATES HOTEL,
SARATOGA SPRINGS, Aug. 8, 1886.
MY DEAR SIR: Your note of this date I have exhibited to Mr. McLean, and in reply he authorizes me to say that he neither owns nor is connected with, nor in any sense controls, the paper to which you refer; that he neither instigated nor authorized the publication of which Halstead complains; that indeed, he knew nothing of the publication until he saw it in print, and that thereupon he immediately telegraphed a message, of which a copy is herewith enclosed, and that in justice to himself, no less than to others, the earliest opportune occasion to disclaim all responsibility for the publication and to avow indignant resentment at the unwarrantable connection of his name to it. I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
ROGER A. PRYOR.

This was accompanied by a certified copy of the telegram of the date of August 11, addressed to Edward Wisnewski, of the Cincinnati Enquirer, by John R. McLean, directing him to deny, on behalf of McLean, to the parties concerned in the publication, all responsibility ascribed to him in the matter, declaring it infamous; that he never made such charges as had been asserted, denouncing the use of his name in that connection, and demanding that it should be done no more."

WINDSOR HOTEL, SARATOGA SPRINGS,
Aug. 18, 1886.
GENERAL ROGER A. PRYOR: Your note of this date, just handed me, is accepted as satisfactory on the part of Halstead. I have the honor to be, etc., your obedient servant,
W. G. TERRELL.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 19.—The cause of the above interesting correspondence was the appearance of a series of articles in the Evening Telegram a few days back. The following appeared in that paper, August 4: "There is a wide-spread wish that McLean and Halstead would meet in a dark room with dirks, and thus settle their quarrel. The public is sick of both of them." August 9 appeared an article in which the following extract occurs: "You should thankfully have embraced the opportunity we gave you. What other decent avenue was open when we described you as a cuckold? None. Now the opportunity is not totally lost. There yet is time. Meet McLean, man, like a man. He has at least thirty more years of reasonable expectation of life than you have. The advantage is all with you. You have for years been regarded as a blustering coward. Now, for the honor of the human family and in the name of the great dishonor heaped upon you, 'screw your courage to the sticking point,' or forever stand branded as a shameless, slobbering, slanderous coward." Colonel T. T. Campbell and Honorable J. R. Thompson, of the Telegram, left for Saratoga to-night, Mr. Thompson going as Mr. Campbell's right hand man. It is understood that their mission is to make good the declarations in the Telegram, Mr. Campbell averring that he is the author of the statements to which M. Halstead objects. If M. Halstead wants satisfaction he has gone East to give it to him in any shape he wants it—with or without gore.

SLEW A PANTHER

And Saved the Lives of Her Sleeping Children—A Buckeye Mother's Brave Deed.

[illegible], Ill., Aug. 19.—A large dun-colored panther which for several weeks terrorized the people about Rome's Grove, eight miles southwest of here, was killed yesterday afternoon by a woman who thereby saved the lives of her two little girls. The plucky woman was Mrs. Montcalm, who was on her way from Indian Territory to her former home near Cleveland, O. Some years ago she and her husband went West, where the latter was killed. Left with two little children the woman loaded her goods on a wagon and started on the long journey to her old home. The travelers reached Rome's Grove yesterday and Mrs. Montcalm stopped and proceeded to get dinner. The children wandered off into the woods, and when the mother called upon them to come to dinner she received no answer. Feeling something was wrong, she took her rifle from the wagon and started for the woods near by. Before going far a moving branch of a tree attracted her attention, and going nearer she discovered a large panther preparing to spring on her children, who were lying asleep at the foot of the tree. Mrs. Montcalm at once drew a bead on the brute and shot him through the body. She then removed the pelt and took it with her on her journey.

Bitter Feeling at Belfast.

According to a reasonable estimate it is asserted that there are 2,000 Catholic men and girls who have been thrown out of employment during the last thirty days. The rich men of Belfast are all Protestants. They own the factories where great numbers of people are employed.

His credentials are directed to that gentleman. After a conference with him he will return to Paso del Norte and enter upon a minute and thorough investigation of Cutting's case. The Department of State at Washington will take no steps until he returns and makes his report. Mr. Sedgwick's baggage was thoroughly examined by the Mexican Customs Inspector at the Mexican Central depot, Paso del Norte, although his escort announced him as special envoy from the United States. THROUGH THE WHIRLPOOL.

A Boston Man Swims Through the Rapids, but Says All the Money in the World Would Not Tempt Him to Do It Again.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONT., Aug. 22.—Wm. J. Kendall, of Boston, to-day swam successfully in a cork vest the whirlpool rapids of Niagara river. The trial was to settle a wager of $10,000 made by Boston parties, he to receive $1,000 of the stakes. There were few spectators of the affair, it having been kept quiet. Kendall relates the following experience: when he reached the spot where Captain Webb is supposed to have lost his life the water seemed to go from under him and a huge wave struck him on the head and shoulders, knocking him unconscious for a few moments. He found his swimming abilities of no use whatever and never expected to come out alive. When entering the whirlpool he was so benumbed and partly unconscious that he could not use a limb and did not know what he was doing. The current took him right into the main eddy and sucked him down like a flash, keeping him under fully fifteen seconds. Upon reaching the under current he was shot out of the pool fully fifty feet from its center. When he reached the surface of the water he had partly regained consciousness, and knowing there was no time to spare before he would be dashed down the lower rapids, he swam to the shore. While landing he was so overcome that he again became unconscious, and his assistants were fully half an hour occupied in reviving him with the aid of stimulants and by rubbing. When asked if he would ever make another trip he said most emphatically: "No; there's not enough money in the world to induce me to repeat this afternoon's experience. A child would have the same chance to go through the rapids and come out all right as an expert swimmer."

MORE SMALL COIN.

A Conference Held on the Growing Scarcity of Change.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—Demands for minor coin, principally one, five and ten-cent pieces, are constantly being received at the Treasury Department from all parts of the country. Superintendent Fox, of the Philadelphia Mint, had a conference with Acting Secretary Fairchild on this subject to-day, and informed him that he thought he would be able inside of thirty days to supply all demands.

The Damage to Property Over Five Million Dollars—Towns Swept Away.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, Aug. 23.—From Indianola comes the saddest story yet reported about the storm. During the height of the storm the Signal office was blown down carrying with it Captain I. A. Reed, Signal Officer, and Dr. H. Rosencrans, both of whom were lost. Fire broke out among the ruins, which extended for blocks on both sides of the street, destroying thirteen houses, among which were H. Regan's large dry goods store and Dr. Louis' extensive drug establishment. Dr. Lewis was in this building at the time it took fire. He escaped being burned to death, but was subsequently drowned, his body being found yesterday. So far as can be learned the following is a complete list of the lives of white people lost: Captain I. A. Reed, Signal Officer, Dr. Crocker, Dr. H. P. Rosencrans, of Elgin, Ill., formerly a resident of Indianola; Mrs. Hodges and two children of Dr. Hodges' family, of Cuero; Mrs. Crocker, of Austin, visiting at Indianola with Mrs. Hodges; Mrs. Henry Sheppard, two children of Mrs. Max Luther, of Corpus Christie; Dr. David Lewis, and a German, name unknown. Besides the above, the bodies of ten colored persons have been found. Never before was the lower Texas coast visited by so terrible and destructive a storm. CUTTING RELEASED.

He Is Given His Liberty by the Mexican Court and the War Cloud Will No Longer Lower.

EL PASO, Aug. 23.—At 11:30 this morning Cutting was taken once more before Judge Castinada's Court, when the official minutes of the Chihuahua Supreme Court, which had arrived this morning, were read to him, which recited the decree releasing him from further custody. The decision of the court is based entirely upon the fact that Medina, the offended party, had waived his right to a civil suit for damages, the court holding that this ended the proceedings of the State. When released by the court Cutting replied: "As long as I am not further detained as a prisoner, I accept my liberty, and I request that a copy of the decree of the Supreme Court be given me for my future use." This the court consented to do in Spanish. Judge Castenada sent a copy of the decree to Mr. Provincio, the Joze Politico, who sent back word that he in person would give Cutting his liberty, accompanied with some wholesome advice.

Mexico is Getting Ready.

GALVESTON, Aug. 23.—A special to the News from Laredo says: In connection with the fact that the military authorities in Mexico have within the last week purchased all the arms and ammunition to be had in Laredo, it is also a fact that, in addition to the two thousand troops within a few hours' march of Nuevo Laredo, there are at present two thousand Mexican cavalry posted along the Rio Grande, between Nuevo Laredo and Piedras Negras. The destruction of private property along the Rio Grande on the American side before an army could be mobilized, would, it is alleged, be great, and the value of the property destroyed would amount to more than the cost of the concentration of a few thousand troops by the Government at the principal points along the American border. The Mexicans say the Americans are a nation of shopkeepers, and won't fight.

PARNELL'S POLICY.

It Is Sustained by the Irish Convention at Chicago—The Resolutions Adopted—John Fitzgerald of Nebraska Chosen for President of the League—A Fine Financial Showing—Adjournment.

CHICAGO, Aug. 20.—The third session of the Irish National League convention did not open yesterday morning at the appointed hour. It was eleven o'clock before Chairman Fitzgerald rose from his seat on the stage and rapped the convention to order.

The report was received with cheers and unanimously adopted. The Committee on Resolutions announced that they were ready to report, and Dr. Betts, the chairman, read the resolutions in a loud clear voice, as follows:

"We, the delegates of the Irish National League of America, in convention assembled, firmly believing in the principles of human freedom and in the right of a people to frame their own laws—a right which is one of the foundation of the prosperity and greatness of this Republic, and which has been advantageously extended to the colonial possessions of Great Britain, do hereby "Resolve 1. That we express our heartiest and most unqualified approval of national self-government for Ireland.

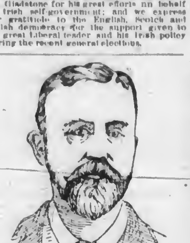
"2. That we heartily approve of the course pursued by Charles Stewart Parnell and his parliamentary associates in the English House of Commons, and we renew the expression of our entire confidence in their wisdom and in their ability to achieve home rule in Ireland.

"3. That we extend our heartfelt thanks to Mr. Gladstone for his great efforts on behalf of Irish self-government; and we express our gratitude to the English, Scotch and Welsh democracy for the support given to the great Liberal leader and his Irish policy during the recent general elections.



EX-PRESIDENT PATRICK EGAN.

"4. That this convention hereby returns its thanks to the American people and press for the generous support which they have given to the cause of self-government in Ireland.

"5. That we record our sense of the remarkable forbearance and self-restraint exercised by our people in Ireland in the face of a cruel and dishonest system of extortion to which they are being subjected by rack-renting landlords, and in view of the license scandalously extended to organized lawlessness in the north of Ireland by partisan officials, and we commend the laudable desire of the people of Ireland to manage their own affairs in their own way.

"6. That we hereby thank the president, treasurer and secretary of the Irish National league for the faithful and efficient manner in which they have discharged the arduous duties of their respective stations.

"7. That the following cablegram be forwarded in name of the chairman of the convention to Hon. Charles Stewart Parnell: 'Delegates to the Irish National League convention of America send greeting from our body, which embraces representative citizens from every State and Territory in the Union and also from Canada, and assure you of a cordial indorsement of your policy by a united and harmonious convention.'"

MICHAEL DAVITT.

Mr. John E. Redmond, M. P. for Wexford, was then introduced by the chair, and spoke for nearly an hour in a very eloquent strain to the convention. Most of his address was historical. So long, said the speaker, as the Irish leaders were true to the great principle of Irish nationality, resolutely refusing to be bought or coerced from a rigid adherence to the full measure of national right, so long were they and no others entitled to decide for themselves upon Irish soil and upon their own responsibility what their future policy should be. Such was the only condition upon which they could accept the support of the American League. One thing he would assure his hearers—the future policy would be one of fight. For coercion they were quite prepared, and to coercion Lord Salisbury would be forced to come. The old struggle will be revived, and before three months are over the new government will be forced, as of old, in defense of the rents of the landlords, to attempt to forge anew the fetter of coercion. The process will not be an easy one, and, even if successful, there was no reason to fear the worst they can do. In this coming struggle, which he honestly believed will be the final one before victory, the Irish people claimed the assistance of their fellow-countrymen and the sympathy of all the citizens of this great republic.

At 3:45 the afternoon proceedings were opened and considerable time was spent in reading the minutes of Wednesday's meeting.

Mr. P. H. O'Connor, of Georgia, secretary of the Committee on Constitution, read the report of that committee. He stated in advance that the constitution as agreed upon by the committee had been approved by Messrs. Davitt, O'Brien, Redmond and Deasy. The constitution as read gives as objects of the general organization: National self-government, land-law reform, local self-government, and development of the commerce labor and industry of Ireland. This is to be brought about by the restitution to Ireland of the management of its own affairs by means of an Irish Parliament; establishment of peasant proprietorship; abolition of nomination by the Government of the members of the following boards: Local governments, board of public works survey of boundaries, education, industries, prisons and fisheries, extension and assimilation of the Irish franchise to that of England, and separate legislation for the elevation of agricultural labor. As specific objects for the Irish National League of America are mentioned: To earnestly and actively sustain the Irish National League; to procure clear and accurate understanding by the American people [illegible] industrial and [illegible] is given to the [illegible] of [illegible] manufactures and [illegible] and to [illegible] [illegible] of the Irish [illegible] and are not to [illegible] the consumption of English articles of manufacture. The [illegible] of the [illegible] in the [illegible] of the American League.

When the resolutions was put before the house for adoption Mr. [illegible], of [illegible], N. Y., objected to the clause [illegible] the boycotting of English manufactures. It [illegible] the league to an [illegible] principle which many members [illegible]. The league was looking to the good will of the English masses. He moved to strike out the clause. A number of the delegates defended the clause, and when the previous question was ordered the motion to strike it out was overwhelmingly defeated. By the same emphatic vote the constitution was adopted.

Rev. George W. Pepper, of Wooster, O., expressed his hope that Ireland's cause would triumph. The Irish were never so much united as to-day. Protestants and Catholics working alike in one common end. It was the sentiment of nine-tenths of the American people that Ireland should have her own Parliamentary home rule. The speaker created a great outburst of applause when he said: "Should all the present methods fail and should Parnell cry out to us Americans 'Come over and help us' I swear to God there will be a vacant pulpit in the United States." Hats went up into the air and ear-piercing yells and shouts seemed endless.

The report of Rev. Dr. Charles O'Reilly, the treasurer of the league, was read. Since the Boston convention two years ago Dr. O'Reilly had received $[illegible] for the Parliamentary fund, and of that sum had sent $314,452.52 to Parnell or his trustees. The receipts of the league fund during the same time were $[illegible] of which all had been disbursed except $16,055.74. The cost of handling all this money was less than one-twentieth of one per cent.

The treasurer then proceeded to read the contributions of the States. Among the larger contributions were these: Connecticut, $12,000; Illinois, $3,000; Indiana, $2,760; Iowa, $4,600; Kentucky, $3,350; Louisiana, $4,400; Maryland, $4,800; Massachusetts, $39,000; Michigan, $9,970; Missouri, $10,000; Minnesota, $4,870; Nebraska, $6,540; New Hampshire, $1,000; New York, $90,100; New Jersey, $16,400; Ohio, $7,850; Pennsylvania, $[illegible]; Rhode Island, $4,800; Virginia, $4,400; Wisconsin, $9,000; Canada, $7,000. Dr. O'Reilly proceeded at some length to read off the contributions of detached leagues and individuals. He said he had received $2,000 since coming to Chicago. Patrick Egan stepped forward and handed to the treasurer a check for $2,000 received from many contributors by Patrick Ford of the Irish World.

Secretary James P. Sutton's report was a sort of retrospective glance of the history of the league since the Boston convention. At that time there were 553 branches. At present the number of branches of the league throughout the United States and Canada has increased to 770.

Then came the tug of war—the nomination of candidates for the presidency of the league. Thomas Brennan, of Nebraska, placed in nomination John Fitzgerald, of Nebraska.

Mr. Berry, of Pennsylvania, nominated Hugh C. McCaffrey, of Philadelphia.

Mr. McCaffrey again rose. "This convention," he said, "has been unanimous so far, and I move that Mr. Fitzgerald be nominated unanimously."

A call of the States followed, the ballot resulting: Fitzgerald, 703; McCaffrey, 244.

No sooner had the result of the ballot been announced than Mr. McCaffrey rose and moved to make the nomination unanimous. This was done amid great applause.

The following were elected to fill the rest of the league offices: Vice-Presidents—Hugh McCaffrey, of Pennsylvania, first; P. A. McKenna, of Ohio, second; and Patrick Martin, of Maryland, third. Treasurer, Dr. Charles O'Reilly, of Detroit (re-elected). Secretary, John P. Sutton, of Wisconsin (re-elected).

The chairman said the hard work of the convention was now performed, and it was in order, he thought, to hear from the representative of the honest yeomanry of Ireland, John Deasy.

Mr. Deasy was loudly cheered on making his appearance. He expressed his pleasure over the work of the convention and his astonishment at the enthusiasm displayed by the Irish-Americans. He thought the convention had been particularly harmonious and wise. He would feel honored, he said, to stand upon the convention platform as a private individual, but felt much honored as the representative of the people of Ireland. The actions of the convention would give courage to the home-rulers in Ireland and would dismay the British Tories.

Then Mr. Michael Davitt stepped to the front, being received with enthusiastic cheers. He said that he had begun his part of the work leading up to this convention with a prediction verified by the results. He had replied to a thousand interviewers that there would be no division in the convention because the enemies of Ireland were only too anxious to see a division. Mr. Davitt denied the assertion of a part of the London press that threatening dispatches had been sent to Mr. Parnell from this country. He had been instructed by Mr. Parnell to make this denial. The speaker closed by expressing the hope that Irish-Americans would continue to place their trust in Parnell and his policy.

Then a Pennsylvania delegate called upon Mrs. Parnell to address the convention very briefly. The lady proclaimed that if Ireland were free she would bear the banner of peace and prosperity before the whole of Europe.

Mr. O'Brien congratulated the convention upon the work accomplished. He invited watchfulness of his and his colleagues' actions, and bespoke the sympathy of all Irish-Americans for Parnell and his Parliamentary followers.

John Finerty spoke in answer to many calls. He was gratified at the outcome of the convention's work. He was not here to fight Mr. Parnell's policy, but no one should compel him to subscribe to anything he thought was wrong. He did not think Gladstone's bill a final settlement. Mr. Finnerty alluded to the threatening war cloud in Central Asia, which, he said, was Ireland's great opportunity. If the Irishmen were not men enough to take hold of this opportunity then they deserved to remain slaves. He had said nothing against Davitt and his policy, but if his proposition is not accepted where are we then? I believe the majority of you are with me."

Mr. Davitt immediately rose when Mr. Finerty had closed and expressed his regrets at being again compelled to speak, but coming as the speech did, it could not pass without a few words of reply. "Mr. Finerty," he said, "has gone over the facts of Irish history and found many faults with England. He did not go back to creation and find fault with God Almighty. Mr. Finerty spoke of a bee-hive inhabited by drones. Aye, the drones are mostly those that do the talking but no work."

Here Mr. Finerty, who had remained upon the stage, jumped excitedly in front of Mr. Davitt and shook his powerful fist in the face of the latter. Mr. Davitt blanched perceptibly, but did not recede an inch. In an instant there was a terrible row, but before it came to blows Mr. Finerty was forced back into a corner by Chairman Fitzgerald and his presidential namesake.

Finerty again rose to his feet in a rage but was again cornered and kept under subjection.

Then John E. Redmond rose and avowed that he would not father Mr. Finerty's remarks. The official utterances of the convention would go forth to the world in the resolutions passed, but still Mr. Finerty's speech would also be heard on the other side of the Atlantic, and therefore it was but fit and meet that the members of Parliament present should plainly state that Mr. Finerty spoke only on his own individual behalf.

The appointments of State delegates to the Executive Committee were left incomplete. Those appointed are as follows:

California, Dr. M. O'Toole; Connecticut, P. W. Wren; Colorado, Robert Morris; Delaware, H. J. Hesston; Georgia, J. F. Armstrong; Illinois, Dan Corkery; Iowa, —— McPartland; Louisiana, Timothy Moran; Indiana, Michael J. Burns; Nebraska, Patrick Egan; Maryland, John Norman; Missouri, Dr. Thomas O'Reilly; Massachusetts, T. M. Brady; Minnesota, W. L. Kelly; Montana, H. J. Carroll; Virginia, James A. Hayes; Kansas, Donat O'Brien; Michigan, Dr. J. E. Scallan; Texas, General A. J. Malloy; District of Columbia, Thomas H. Walsh; Ontario, John F. Teefy.

At 11:10 the convention came to an end.

THE other morning at the family residence in McCracken County, a small daughter of Wm. Schmidt was drowned in a well. All the family but an aunt—a young lady—were some distance from the house at the time. The aunt says that a man in mask came into the house and forcibly took the child from her, after assaulting her with a stick and tearing her clothing, and ran. In searching for the man the well was suggested, and the child fished from the bottom. The aunt had only a few minutes before been left temporarily in charge of the child. No trace of the man could be found. The story of the aunt is generally accepted, though it is a questionable one.

The Enquirer [illegible] extract from the speech made by Hon. John G. Carlisle at the reception given him by his Newport admirers:

When the election of Grover Cleveland to the Presidency of the United States was confirmed and the Government passed into the hands of the Democratic party there were a great many of our Republican friends who predicted various things were to happen. They said the Confederate war debt would be paid, that pensions would be given to Confederate soldiers, that rebel war claims would have precedence, that the Supreme Court would be reorganized, the Constitution annulled and the colored people again put into slavery.

These predictions were made with the utmost confidence, and a great many citizens believed them.

"I am glad to say that after an experience of a year and a half not one of these promises have been fulfilled. Take, for instance, the returning of the colored people to slavery. Why, a Democratic President has just appointed a colored man to a high official place in the District of Columbia, and a Republican Senate has refused to confirm him. Gentlemen, when the last House of Representatives, just adjourned, assembled the first Monday in December it found itself in political accord with the Chief Executive for the first time in twenty-five years. It is true that the Senate was still Republican and that a large number of Government officials were also Republican, and the Democratic President could not appoint officers without the consent of the Republican Senate, nor could the Democratic House, over which I had the honor to preside, pass a new law without the concurrence of the Senate. Notwithstanding these facts the Executive Department and House of Representatives have made during eight months a record unsurpassed by any in our history. When the people elected Grover Cleveland they elected an able and patriotic man, which is shown by his administration of his high office. He has demonstrated to the people his belief is that public office is a public trust, and that it is not to be used as a personal prerogative for his own aggrandizement.

"This administration has been in power over one year and during that time has made many necessary and valuable reforms. I can not for the want of time, go into details as I might to night, but I will cite a few instances of these reforms.

"Expenses have been cut down, useless officers and servants dispensed with and the running of the country restored to the old constitutional method. I have here an abstract from the books of the Treasury Department from June 30, '85, to June 30, 1886, showing that the expenses of operating the Government were reduced more than $25,000,000. If it had not been for large increases in the pensions the net decrease would have been larger still. Instead of depriving soldiers of their pensions the record show that a Democratic Commissioner of Pensions, with a less force than his Republican predecessors, has passed upon more claims and adjusted more pensions, so these payments alone over the previous fiscal year amounted to $7,500,000 more. No man who has any regard for his reputation has been wasteful and extravagant. The expenses of the service with all functions performed as before and $25,000,000 saved to the taxpayers, contradicts it. It has been the fashion in some quarters to criticise the House of Representatives on the alleged ground of extravagance and wastefulness and nothing accomplished.

"Why, my friends, the House during its last session has performed more labor and considered and passed more bills than were ever considered in one session before. Ten thousand two hundred and thirty-three bills and joint resolutions were all considered. Every one of them had to be referred to a committee and reported on.

"This is about 2000 more bills than were introduced into both houses during the first fifty years of the existence of Congress. Up to the close of the Twenty-fifth Congress there had been introduced into the House and Senate only 8000 bills, and now at a single session we introduced 2000 more. Nearly 1000 have been passed and become laws, a larger percentage than any other House ever passed. So much for the work of the House, and I state it in order that people may know how the business of the country is increasing year by year.

"We [illegible] when we [illegible] had [illegible] navy, it would look [illegible] and to a [illegible] almost impossible [illegible] there came after the close of [illegible] war Congress had expended [illegible] in constructing, repairing and equipping vessels, and yet there was not a vessel [illegible] of the navy. They were not today that would [illegible] they could neither fight nor run away, and during all that time the Navy Department had been under the control of our Republican friends. What has become of the [illegible] I could show you what he [illegible] and when I speak of this I do not mean the money spent in maintaining the civil department of the navy. I speak only of actual money spent in constructing and properly arming vessels. Had the money been faithfully expended our navy would today be equal to any that rides the seas.

"Eighty-six vessels have been built in that time, and the amount of their original cost has been more than equaled by the amount of repairs put upon them. The policy of the Navy Department being explained, it is easy to understand why we have no navy."

The speaker went on to refer to the cost of the Yantic and repairs on her of twice her cost, the Brooklyn, the Hartford, the Lackawanna and the Minnesota giving statistical figures showing that repairs on the vessels greatly exceeded their cost, and that they were either quoted as good for [illegible] years, five years or no good at all.

Said Mr. Carlisle: "The Democratic party has always been a friend of the navy and the merchant marine. It is our duty as representatives of the people to see that the country has a respectable showing on the high sea. During the session just closed we have passed bills appropriating three millions for war vessels and have authorized the President to enter into contracts for the completion of four double turreted iron clads and for the construction of four other war vessels. We wish to re-establish supremacy on the high sea. We now come before the people to show that we have not wasted their money, but have used it for some useful purpose.

"As to the charge of extravagance, I have prepared documents here which show that the appropriations for the maintenance of the Government were about $6,000,000 less than last year. The great appropriation bill, which appropriates the money to support the various departments, was $6,000,000 less this year than last, and these gentlemen while criticizing the conduct of the Democratic House are silent about the Republican Senate which increased the appropriations when they came to be considered by their body by $23,000,000. I have here a tabulated statement showing the time each bill passed, and if it became a law, and the result shows that the appropriation bills of the Democratic House were $23,000,000 less than as the Senate amended them.

"I had the honor to appoint a committee of conferees of the House to meet a like committee from the Senate, and our committee succeeded in reducing the amount to $3,000,000 more than at first proposed by the House. It will be seen also that we have made ample provision for the support of the Government for the next fiscal year.

He went on to say that two hundred millions of our public lands were in possession of various railroad companies on grants allowing them so many acres per mile if the railroads completed their roads within a certain time, and that they had not completed them nor forfeited their grants, and that fifty million acres of the public domain was restored to the Government. He continued: "A large part of the lands in the West are held by foreign syndicates and corporations. Our country was in danger of the same system of absent landlordism that has cursed Ireland and other European countries. We passed a law providing that this land cannot revert to the heirs of these aliens and preventing other aliens from acquiring our lands. The Democratic party is opposed to any such policy as allowing foreigners to usurp our soil.

He went on to speak of the great West as a refuge of the laboring man which keeps up wages in this country, of the passage of the bill allowing arbitration of labor trouble and preventing the importation of foreign labor and establishing a bureau of labor statistics.

LAST week the Cincinnati Daily Enquirer presented all the Democratic papers in Ohio with supplements containing a history of the Democratic party in Ohio from the organization of the State government. This week it proposes to present the Republican papers of its State with a suppliment containing a history of the Republican party in Ohio. That paper is always surpassing every thing else with its enterprise.

The yield in Illinois does not promise to exceed one half of that of last year, while Iowa will be about 60 per cent. of last year's crop. In Minnesota, Nebraska, Michigan, Ohio and Indiana the condition of the growing corn is still reported as averaging fairly well.

In Wisconsin, Missouri and Kansas the general outlook is poor, but sufficient data is not at hand to make any close computation as to the probable yield.

IT seems that our neighbor State Indiana is just now considerably imbued with the determination of making short work of those guilty of murder, and in the short space of one week Judge Lynch has convicted and executed two men who wantonly took the life of another. Our neighbor town, Aurora, was, last Thursday, the scene of mob violence which culminated in the hanging of a murderer before the news of the murder was generally known in that usually quiet little city. Immediately following the fatal stabbing the excitement was at high tide, and to incite the desperate work it was only necessary for some thoughtless and excited man to shout, "hang him!" and a rope was at hand, and the command obeyed in a remarkably short time. The action of the mob is condemned by many, while others sanction it.

THE Courier-Journal and Congressman Willis, of Louisville, are having a little war of their own, growing out of Mrs. Thompson's being continued in the post office at that place. Some of Willis' pet measures were not disposed of during the last session of Congress, and he is pleading for another opportunity to [illegible] them on the floor of Congress.

The Frankfort correspondent of the Louisville Commercial furnishes that paper the following:

"Floated around the State-house a little while this morning and found things assuming shape for the great political battle next spring. Nearly everybody about the capital is a candidate for something.

Jim McKenzie, the talented Secretary of the State, is already in the field for Congressman in the Second District. They say he is "making Bone bowl" down there. McKenzie is a hard man to beat, and as his principal opponent is about as hard a man to beat as McKenzie is, there is going to be fun is the district for the next few weeks. Col. McCarty, the Assistant Secretary of State, is watching the fight from afar off, and says he is a candidate for nothing unless he can get a good situation as toll-gate or light-house keeper in some lonely spot.

Gen. Hewitt, Auditor, is grooming himself for re-election. Hewitt has made such a good officer that I do not think he will meet with any opposition this time. Very few men could fill the office at all, and I doubt if one could be found to fill it as acceptably as does Gen. Hewitt.

Hardin is making the welkin ring for re-election. He has for his foe the brilliant lawyer Judge Richards, late of the Superior Court bench. It is going to be a close race. Richards seems to have the inside track now, but how long he will keep it is a very mixed question. Charley Offut was spoken of as a probable candidate during the Legislature, but Charley made himself so unpopular while Speaker that when the Legislature adjourned he could find no wind to fan his boom. He is a young man yet, and has enough ambition for a dozen men. He may get there some time, but some of us will never live to see the day.

Tom Corbett is preparing to cast his line to windward to try and bring in the Register of the Land Office. Corbett is the "workingest" man about the square, and if he gets his prise the people will have one of the best officers they ever had. No opposition has developed as yet, but I suppose the woods will be full of them before long.

Dr. Pickett wands to be Superintendent of Public Instruction again and wants to bad, but I do not think he will get there this time. Dr. Pickett has been in office nearly eight years, and has issued one report, and he is equally slow about everything else. He burns a heap of gas at night, but I am told does very little work. He has as his opponent Prof. Henry Kirby Taylor, a brilliant young educator of Russellville, and one who would put a little life into the office if elected. Pickett will have a hard row to hoe this time. He is fearfully unpopular, but he has brought it all on himself.

Tate is, of course, a candidate for re-election. He has as his opponent Barry South (you've heard of Barry) Tate seems to be glad of opposition for he knows they will have a convention this time.

Altogether the air is full of politics. Who will be Governor does not seem to disturb these politicians in the least.

FATHER METHUSELAH.

Fresh Ideas About the Grand Old Man Who Stood Off Father Time for Ten Centuries.

I have just been reading James Whitcomb Riley's response to "The Old Man" at the annual dinner of the Indianapolis Literary Club, and his reference to Methuselah has awakened in my mind many recollections and reminiscences of that grand old man. We first meet Methuselah in the capacity of a son. For three hundred years Enoch and Methuselah jogged along together in the capacity of father and son. Then Enoch was suddenly cut down. It was at this time that little Methuselah first realized what it was to be an orphan. He could not at first realize that his father was dead. He could not understand why Enoch, with no inherited disease, should be shuffled off at the age of three hundred and sixty-five years. But the doctor said to Methuselah: "My son, you are indeed fatherless. I have done all I could, but it is useless. I had told Enoch many a time that if he went swimming in before the ice was out of the creek it would finally down him, but he thought he knew better than I did. He was a headstrong man, Enoch was. He sneered at me and alluded to me as a fresh young gosling, because he was three hundred years older than I was. He has received the reward of the wilful, and verily the doom of the smart Aleck is his."

Methuselah now cast about him for some occupation which would take up his attention and assuage his wild, passionate grief over the loss of his father. He entered into the walks of men and learned their ways. It was at this time that he learned the pernicious habit of using tobacco. We can not wonder at it when we remember that he was now fatherless. He was at the mercy of the coarse, rough world. Possibly he learned to use tobacco when he went away to attend business college after the death of his father. Be that as it may, the noxious weed certainly hastened his death, for six hundred years after this we find him a corpse!

Death is ever a surprise, even at the end of a long illness and after a ripe old age. To those who are near it seems abrupt; so to his grandchildren, some of whom survived him, his children having died of old age, the death of Methuselah came like a thunderbolt from a clear sky.

Methuselah succeeded in corking up more of a record, such as it was, than any other man of whom history informs us. Time, the tomb-builder and amateur mower, came and leaned over the front yard and looked at Methuselah, and ran his thumb over the jagged edge of his scythe, and went away whistling a low refrain.

He kept up this refrain business for nearly ten centuries, while Methuselah continued to stand out amid the general wreck of men and nations.

Even as the young, strong mower, going forth with his mower for to mow, spareth the tall and dignified drab hornet's nest and passeth by on the other side, so Time, with his famous hour-glass and his overworked hay knife over his shoulder, and his long Mormon whiskers and his high, slick dome of thought, with its gray lambrequin of hair around the base of it, moved all around Methuselah and then passed on.

Methuselah decorated the graves of those who perished in a dozen different wars. He did not enlist himself, for over nine hundred years of his life he was exempt. He would go to the enlisting place and offer his services, and the officer would tell him to go home and encouraged his grandchildren to go. Then Methuselah would sit around Noah's front steps, and smoke and criticise the conduct of the war, also the conduct of the enemy.

It is said of Methuselah that he never was the same man after his son Lamech died. He was greatly attached to Lamech, and when he woke up one night to find his son purple in the face with membraneous croup, he could hardly realize that he might lose him. The idea of losing a boy who had just rounded the glorious morn of his 777th year, had never occurred to him. But death loves a shining mark, and he gathered him home and left Methuselah to moan and mourn on for a couple more centuries without him.

Methuselah finally got so far that he could not sleep any after four o'clock in the morning, and he didn't see how any one else could. The older he got and the less valuable his time became, the earlier he would rise, so that he could get an early start. As the centuries filed slowly by, and Methuselah got where all he had to do was to shuffle into his loose-fitting clothes and rest his gums on the top of a large sleek-headed cane and mutter up the chimney, and then groan and extricate himself from his clothes again and retire. He rose earlier and earlier in the morning, and muttered more and more about the young folks sleeping away the best of the day, and said he had no doubt but that sleeping and snoring till breakfast time helped to carry off Lam. But one day old Father Time came along with a new scythe, and he drew his whet-stone across it a few times, and rolled the sleeves of his red flannel undergarments up over his warty elbows, and Mr. Methuselah passed on to that undiscovered country with a ripe experience and a long, clean record.

We can almost fancy how the physicians, who had disagreed about his case all the way through, came and insisted on a post-mortem examination to prove which was right and what was really the matter with him. We can imagine how people went by shaking their heads and regretting that Methuselah should have tampered with tobacco when he knew that it affected his heart.

But he is gone. He lived to see his own promissory notes rise, flourish, acquire interest, pine away at last, and finally outlaw. He acquired a large farm in the very heart of the county seat, and refused to move or to plot it and call it Methuselah's addition. He came out in spring regularly for nine hundred years after he got too old to work out his poll tax on the road, and put in his time telling the rising generation how to make a good road. Meantime other old people, who were almost one hundred years of age, moved away and went West, where they would attract attention and command respect. There was actually no pleasure in getting old around where Methuselah was, and being ordered about and scolded and kept in the background by him.

So, when at last he died, people sighed and said: "Well, it was better for him to die before he got childish. It was best that he should die at a time when he knew it all. We can't help thinking what an acquisition Methuselah will be on the evergreen shore when he gets there, with all his ripe experience and his habits of early rising."

And the next morning after the funeral Methuselah's family did not get out of bed till nearly nine o'clock.—Bill Nye, in Boston Globe.

"THE CURSE OF SLANG."

A Fair Girl Graduate Illustrates the Truth of the Essay's Title.

"Mamie," said a grammar-school girl to a member of the graduating class, "have you finished your essay?"

"Oh yes," gushed Mamie, "and it is too lovely for anything—a princess slip of white lawn, the back cut off a little below the waist line, and full breadths of silk gathered in so as to hang gracefully over the tournure, and three blue [illegible] on the [illegible]."

"Why, what are you talking about?" interrupted her friend. "I mean, have you finished writing your essay, you know?"

"Oh, no," said Mamie, her enthusiasm rapidly diminishing, "but I have begun it, and I wish the awful thing was in Halifax."

"What's the subject?"

"The Curse of Slang."

"Gracious! Isn't that a difficult subject to write up?"

"Difficult! Well, I should giggle! I'll have to hump myself to get it finished in time for the commencement, and I've a good notion to let it slide. I might shut up the Professor's eyes by pleading illness, but I'm not that sort of a hairpin. But come, waltz up into my room and look at my stunning graduating harness. It'll paralyze you."—Norristown Herald.

THE ENTERTAINMENT

Good Attendance and Lots of Fun.

The entertainment given by the Burlington Dramatic troupe last week for the benefit of Morgan Academy was favored with a liberal patronage, which the [illegible] was presented with amusement duly appreciated.

The first night Stolen Will was presented, followed the second evening by "Our Boys of '76." These dramas [illegible] and [illegible] evening [illegible] wound up with [illegible] most laughable [illegible], which created a storm of applause, but not until the last two farces were presented did the boys throw open the throttle and let go all the comical talent of which they are possessed.

That the effort of the troupe was appreciated was attested by the fullness of the audience each night, and when the curtain raised Saturday evening a well filled hall greeted the company, and seemed to stimulate the individual members to the best interpretation of their respective characters, and when the curtain descended the last time the audience was unanimous in the verdict that the drama, "Our Boys of '76," had been especially well rendered for amateurs.

As the performance progressed it continued to improve, and taken as a whole it was a credit to the troupe.

Each member is entitled to special mention, but time and space forbid; suffice it to say that all who witnessed the dramas are well pleased with the manner in which they were presented, and consider that they got value received for the admission paid.

One of the principal features each evening was the cut-flower display, the selections ranging from the commanding and imposing sunflower that nods and bends in the breezes to the modest and delicate pansy. Each actor and actress came in for a liberal installment, every evening, of these flowers wrought into unique bouquets, and at times it was difficult to determine which predominated on the stage performers or flowers.

Next Saturday afternoon and at night the company will give performances with an entire change of programme. Admission in the afternoon 15 cents; at night 25 cents. No extra charge for reserved seats.

Miss Mary Ryle's fine upright piano was used as one of the musical instruments.

The small boys had a picnic selling tickets. The only way to get rid of them was to buy.

Harry Piper and A. E. Stephens, of Cleves, Ohio, furnished good music for the entertainment.

John Palmer played corpse to such perfection that Geo. Piper convinced the audience that a very offensive effluvia came from the "cooling-board."

E. E. Foster makes a splendid "Ethiopian," while Prof. Mack's appearance in one of his characters, discounted that of any tramp that ambles up and down the land.

Just before the curtain went up the first evening, Joe Reed, who was circulating pretty lively in the gallery, created quite a sensation by falling over into the dress circle. He had regained consciousness before being picked up, and was but slightly hurt.

THE INSTITUTE.

The Boone County Teachers' Institute was called to order Tuesday, Aug. 17th, 1886, at 1:30 p. m., by County Superintendent, H. J. Foster. He made a very interesting opening address after which the Institute organized by the election of A. S. Rachal, Misses Bristow and Southgate, critics and J. C. Mack, secretary.

The subjects discussed during the session covered the entire range of the teacher's work from the primary grade to the high school and academic work. Every phase of the teacher's duty was covered by the programme and was ably introduced and discussed.

The following subjects created the most animated discussion: Arithmetic, (Fractions,) grading county schools, relation of the teacher to the patrons, best method of imparting moral instruction in the school, and several others.

The County Teachers' Association organized for the coming year by the election of the following officers: President, John P. Ryle; Vice-President, L. M. Whitehead; Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Virginia Southgate. Miss Bristow and J. C. Mack were appointed members of the executive committee.

F. A. Withers, County Superintendent of Ohio county, Ind., was present Thursday and Friday, and discussed very creditably several subjects of importance.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved: That we, as teachers of Boone county, do hereby respectfully request our County Superintendent to adopt a system of text books for use in our schools.

In so much as our present County Superintendent, H. J. Foster, is soon to retire from his office, and in all probability this will be the last time he will meet with us in an official capacity, therefore be it resolved,

That we, the teachers of Boone county in Institute assembled, do hereby respectfully tender him our sincere and heartfelt thanks for his kindness, interest and work in our behalf.

Forty-four teachers were enrolled during the four days of the Institute.

A newspaper man claims to have made the discovery that no man was ever bitten by a mad dog who paid for his local paper a year in advance. We haven't the statistics at hand to verify the truth of this assertion, but nevertheless we think the thing is worth trying. No man with a subscription receipt in his pocket was ever struck by lightning or carried away by a cyclone.—Ex.

Henry Spug's wife had him arraigned before Esquire Gaines the other morning on a charge of assault and battery. Spugs was given one cent and cost, which, in the aggregate, amounted to something over $6. Spugs and wife are of the ebony hue.

Mrs. Noah Craven was quite sick last week.

It is seldom that a printing office is honored with an array of female beauty equal to that which graced our sanctum Tuesday night of last week. Among the number were several popular belles from a distance. Come again, ladies.

Ben Corbin and Bob Clore, of Bellevue, passed through Burlington last Monday with a span of fine mules that will be exhibited at the Latonia Fair this week. If they don't capture the blue tie there will have to be some very extra mules in the ring.

John J. Berkshire was in Aurora last Thursday and saw the mob when it took its victim from the officer. He says he believes the man was dead before he was strung up. The constable, Anderson, from whom the man was taken, some years since, lived on John E. Walton's land in the Bellevue neighborhood.

School begins in Morgan Academy Monday, September 6th, with advantages that have never been offered before. The house will be ready to receive all scholars that may come when school opens, and every thing will be taught that is taught in any of the colleges. Board for young men and ladies reasonably cheap with the best families of the town, and with a liberal patronage of the public of Boone, the school will be a permanent success.

A Good Chance.

HON. REUBEN CONNER; Dear Sir—

I will receive and admit to free tuition in the State College of Kentucky, on your certificate of appointment, three young men from your district, properly prepared. On page 25 of the catalogue herewith sent, you will find the qualifications for admission into the Preparatory Department. On page 27 a close estimate of expenses. Send none but good, moral, steady young men. Yours Truly,

Miss Lillie Throop, of Cincinnati, Ohio, an experienced teacher of music, German and French, has a position in Morgan Academy to teach those branches of study for the coming school year. She is a lady of rare musical attainments, and will have a room furnished in the Academy, where she will teach instrumental music (piano and organ), also vocal music and voice culture, together with the languages, German and French. The young ladies of the school will be under her direct supervision and control, and she will spare no pains to make them refined and cultured.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Dr. Slater and Miss Sallie Snyder have gone to Old Point Comfort.

Sunday morning the Erlanger rink was the scene of a prize fight. The parties all came from Cincinnati.

A wedding, although an every day occurrence in this age of the world, always creates a stir in local circles, and our town has been enjoying for several days the excitement preceding such important events. Mr. W. S. Cole, a leading grocer of this city, and Miss Rouse, a daughter of Geo. E. Rouse, a wealthy farmer near here, are the contracting parties, and to-day the nuptial knot will be adjusted. They will take up their residence here in the house the groom has handsomely furnished for the reception of his bride.

TAYLORSPORT.

Tyson Cushon has erected a large tombstone to his child's grave, and Mr. Sprague has also placed one at the grave of her daughter.

Miss Susie Kyle of New York who has been visiting her mother at this place for the last five weeks has returned to home.

Some of our residents living in Main are becoming very aristocratic, even when they rise as early as 4 o'clock in the morning they never walk so far as the gate without kane, when they commenced the kane craze.

Harry Fox was being molested considerably by one of our citizens while on the river bank a few days ago. After tormenting the man for a while he put him in a fish box. [illegible] then a friend of both parties interfered, and Harry put him in and locked the box, and after a few hours confinement released them.

BEAVER.

Getting the roads in good trim is now the order of the day.

Don't forget the picnic at Mudlick next Saturday. A good time is assured all who attend.

Sleet Bros., are invoicing their old stock preparatory to filling up with a nice stock of goods.

The farmers are jubilant over the prospects of fine crops, the recent showers having put a nice finish on them.

Beaver is getting ready to have her picture taken as soon as Ed. Black can get his machine set at the proper range.

The camp meeting at the Springs is a decided success in every particular. Revs. Simons and Froh have the meeting in charge, and I doubt if a couple of divines can be found in the State, who are better qualified to conduct a revival, such as the one now in progress at the Springs. The attendance last Sunday was estimated at 700.

UNION.

Miss Ida Huey, of Illinois, is the guest of relatives here.

Mrs. J. B. Coombs and Joe Coombs, of Covington, spent last Sunday with her uncle, H. W. Bristow.

Miss Nannie Burkett, one of our prettiest ladies, is visiting relatives in Bracken county.

Mrs. Dickerson and Mrs. Chambers and her little daughter are visiting L. C. Norman at Frankfort.

Several of our young people attended the marriage of Miss Mattie Baker, of Covington and Louis Watson, of Texas, last week. The bride was well known and loved here, and the best wishes of her many friends will go with her to her new home.

PETERSBURG.

Dr. Kyle, of Aurora, was in town last Thursday.

Capt. Alden was in the city a couple of days last week, leaving Capt. Christy in charge of his boat.

Judge Dills and Cy Crisler, of Burlington, were on our streets last Wednesday.

Miss Bell Carson, of Florence, is visiting relatives here.

The Clippers defeated the Aurora Reds here last Thusday in a score of 31 to 4.

Richard Yonell, of Cincinnati, is spending a few days with his many friends here.

Born—Last Thursday to Sid Gaines and wife, a boy.

Dr. J. D. Terrill is carrying his hand in a sling, the result of mosquito bite.

Alten Stott and wife, of Osgood, Ind., spent a few days here last week.

T. B. Matthews, of Covington, has taken Mr. Wade's place on the Minnie.

A colored girl who worked for Levi Lemons, left last Saturday, taking two of his wife's skirts. Determined to recover the stolen articles, he watched for her, and when returning from Lawrenceburg he discovered her, and making her surrender the stolen articles, let her go on her way rejoicing.

VERONA.

Miss Emma Sheets is the guest of Miss Allie Whitson.

Daniel Roberts took in the camp-meeting at Big Bone the past week.

Marshall Whitson is happy again. Gallatin, Tenn., no longer has any charms for him.

Willie Hudson left on the 18th for a trip through Kansas, and will be gone about four weeks.

The pike fever is up again, several wagons are daily at work. Verona is no slouch by any means.

Bro. Bristow will commence a protracted meeting in the M. E. church next Wednesday night.

Miss Emma Blackford, of Nicholasville, and Miss Annie Bannister, of Dry Ridge, are visiting Miss Mattie Sleet, of this place.

The boys have quit talking about the school tax, and when the Sheriff made his appearance in town last Thursday they were willing to ante up.

Doctors Jones, Finnell and Bagby, held a post-mortem examination on Rice Vest, colored, on the 19th inst., resulting in finding cancer of the stomache.

W. L. Riddell, our accommodating Circuit Clerk, and J. R. Clutterbuck, our faithful sheriff, were in town last Thursday on legal business. They got somewhat deranged on starting home, taking the south bound passenger train for Louisville. Wonder when they will turn up again!

BULLITTSVILLE.

Wash Watts had a hay stack struck by lightning.

Mr. Benham, of Indiana, is here in the interest of a school.

Miss Daisy Wise, of Covington, is visiting Miss Annie Clore.

Miss Nannie Winston, of Covington, is visiting her sister, Mrs. G. W. Gaines.

The recent rains insure a fine corn crop. Farmers are busy plowing for wheat.

Courtney Walton and Jack Berkshire represented Petersburg's "Plug hat Association" at this place last Sunday.

Another curiosity in Bullittsville. Fletcher Clore has a two-year old colt that weighs 1230 pounds. Who can beat that?

Wanted—To know what has become of our Sunday-school Superintendent? He fails to come any more. [He is stage struck—got the dramatics.—Eds.]

Dick Stephens is "cutting quite a swell" in his new buggy. Wonder with whom he took the first ride in it? It will tell you an important fact.

Messrs. Will Graves, Wash Watts, John Hushall and Henry Sprague have secured the services of Miss Bettie Riley to teach a private school near here.

R. L. Johnson, of Verona, was visiting acquaintances in general and a lady friend in particular, here last Saturday and Sunday. We would remind our young friend Clinton, that if he don't hurry up he will be too late.

Will Watts is lamenting his fate. It seems that he has promised a certain old maid near town that if no one else would have her he would. He says now that she is left all around sure, and he is perplexed to know how to get out of his scrape. "Dar is heaps of trouble on de ole man's mind." He is sure that she will want to hold him to his bargain. He has finally concluded to tell her that he was just a fooling. Persons would better be careful where and when they talk, for reporters are apt to be anywhere.

REARING CALVES.

A Method Which Can Be Called the First Step Toward an Improved Herd.

First, own good cows. Treat them kindly and keep them docile and quiet. When about to calve, place the cow in a separate stall and leave her loose. Feed no grain or stimulating food for a month before calving. When the calf arrives, remove it to a pen at a distance where it can be kept quiet and comfortable. It will never know what it is to be with its mother, and much trouble afterwards will be spared. In three or four hours milk the cow, and give the milk to the calf, teaching it to drink. With patient skill the calf may be taught to drink in the first lesson. Milk the cow four times a day, and feed the milk to the calf until the fourth day, when the cow is returned to the stable and the milk is saved for skimming. The calf gets only skimmed milk after this—three quarts at a feed twice a day, and warmed up to eighty degrees. The feed is gradually increased as the calf grows, and when it is two months old it is taught to take a little mixed ground corn and oats, and have a small quantity with the warmed skimmed milk until it is six or eight months old. This enables the calf to make a fine growth, and brings it up in docility and gentleness. These qualities are improved by a daily brushing and carding, and by using it to the halter and to lead, while it is being fed in the pen. Continual handling in this way prevents the contracting of any of the common vices, and when the calf becomes a cow, it is in an excellent state of discipline and gives no trouble. This method, well carried out, is the main step toward an improved herd, which will be of very great value, and one gained at a very small cost.—American Agriculturist.

—In Decatur County, Georgia, is situated a remarkable cavern called the Blowing cave. The entrance to the cave is thirty feet long and twenty feet deep. It has two openings, through which it is said to breathe. It draws in air in the forenoon and blows it out in the afternoon. A person who places his ear near one of the mouths will hear a noise resembling a loud roaring of wind. It is thought the cave has some connection with the Gulf of Mexico. The owner says he often goes to its mouth on hot evenings and gets a refreshing breeze.—Chicago Times.

—Petroleum is the topic of the office, drawing-room and workshop, and a great part of our people think only of oil, talk oil and dream oil. Miss Jennie Smith, the railroad evangelist, who has been laboring here, when leaving the other day, approached at the train Capt. V——, a well-known operator, who was standing on the platform, took him by the hand, as is her custom, and asked: "Brother, how are you? Are you on the rock or sand?" The Captain absent-mindedly but excitedly replied: "We are two bits in the sand and gushing like blazes."—Pittsburgh Press.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1837. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. Schwartz & Haslett, Pittsburg, Pa., Gentlemen:—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family. Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

GUILTY.

The Chicago Anarchists Convicted.

Spies, Lingg, Engel, Parsons, Fielden, Schwab and Fischer Guilty of Murder in First Degree,

And Neebe Guilty of Manslaughter, His Sentence Being Fifteen Years in the Penitentiary.

Schwab's Wife Fell Fainting to the Floor—Spies' Mother Led Weeping From the Room.

The Prisoners Remained Stolid and Were Taken Quietly Back to Jail by the Bailiffs.

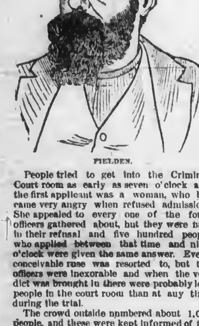
Colonel Black Made a Motion for a New Trial Which Will be Argued Next Thursday—Interview With the Prisoners.

THE VERDICT.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—There was breathless attention when the verdict which condemned seven of the Anarchists to hang and gave the eighth fifteen years in the penitentiary was announced yesterday. This was succeeded by intense excitement. The prisoners were ranged along the wall on the south side of the court room, hidden from the public by a line of policemen. Mrs. Schwab fainted, but no other demonstration was made.

The verdict was simply guilty as charged in the case of August Spies, Lingg, Engel, Parsons, Fielden, Schwab and Fischer, and Neebe guilty of manslaughter, his sentence being fifteen years in the penitentiary.

Mr. Black rose and moved for a new trial. Mr. Grinnell objected to this being considered at this term. Judge Gary said that such a motion was unnecessary at this time in any case. He then thanked the jury and said there would be no more business for them this week. The prisoners were taken back to jail.



FIELDEN.

People tried to get into the Criminal Court room as early as seven o'clock and the first applicant was a woman, who became very angry when refused admission. She appealed to every one of the forty officers gathered about, but they were firm in their refusal and five hundred people who applied between that time and nine o'clock were given the same answer. Every conceivable ruse was resorted to, but the officers were inexorable and when the verdict was brought in there were probably less people in the court room than at any time during the trial.

The crowd outside numbered about 1,000 people, and these were kept informed of the progress inside by the police. Some of the people who succeeded in getting up stairs and took seats at the west end of the room, were Mrs. Spies, Mrs. Parsons, Neebe's wife, Lingg's sweetheart, August Spies' sister and her brother Ferdinand, Mrs. Amer, General Parsons, Spies' mother and half a dozen others who have been regular attendants at the trial.

AUGUST SPIES.

Judge Gary was on time, and at 9:56 the court was opened and the judge sang out to spectators to take seats and not to make any demonstration. The prisoners were then brought in and ranged along the south wall, by the windows. The judge then turned and told the clerk to call the names of the jury. This was done amid oppressive silence, except on the part of Neebe, who was probably the most affected of the prisoners. Neebe turned and looked across the room, to the place where his wife sat. He craned his neck forward and said something in an undertone to himself. Parsons looked straight ahead to the place where his brother, the General, was standing. He then turned and looked into the street where, under the burning sun, a thousand men and women gazed anxiously at the upper windows. Parsons glanced around, and with a bold, defiant look, pulled something from his pocket. It was the battle flag of the Anarchists—a dirty, red silk handkerchief. Turning so that all in the street might see, but in such a manner that the court would not, he waved it for a moment or two.

Some one in the street saw it, and a cheer was uttered, but quickly stopped. When the people in the court room turned to ascertain the cause of the demonstration, Parsons sat stiffly in his chair and gazed vacantly at the clock. The others gazed anxiously into the faces of the jury and friends and then up at the dignified judge, as if in hope of gleaning some encouragement.

SCHWAB.

The relatives and friends of the prisoners were the most affected. Over in the corner sat a little old woman, nearly hidden by a big policeman. It was the mother of August Spies and during the half-hour she was in the court room she wept constantly, holding a white handkerchief to her eyes. Mrs. Parsons and General Parsons said nothing, betraying no evidence of the suspense that they must have experienced. Mrs. Parsons looked at her husband and once or twice opened her lips as if to speak. Lingg's sweetheart was next to her and during the calling of the jurors' names kept a constant signaling with him.

The call was finally finished, and then it was that the prisoners and their friends began to feel the excitement. Just two minutes [illegible] o'clock Foreman Osborne rose to his feet and faced the jury. The suspense was terrible, and as if already aware of the fate in store for them, a tremor came over the prisoners, while the feelings of their relatives and friends were manifested by the [illegible] of the muscles, hard breathing and shaking limbs.

"Have you agreed upon a verdict?" and the voice of the judge was almost inaudible, and even he gave way to the momentary solemnity and suspense. "Have you agreed?"

Then all eyes were withdrawn from him and turned on the foreman, who reached forward and gave the papers which he held in his hand to the clerk who, in turn, gave them to the judge. The foreman's work was done. The judge and the clerk held a whispered conference and finally the clerk raised the paper where the light would fall on it and the judge bent forward and fixed his eyes on the spectators. The people were like marble figures, not a word nor sign did they make, but their eyes merely shifted from the judge to the clerk. The latter then began reading slowly as follows:

"We find Spies, Parsons, Fielden, Schwab, Fischer, Lingg and Engel guilty, as charged in the indictment, and punishable by death. We find Neebe guilty of manslaughter, and fix his punishment at fifteen years in the penitentiary."

The clerk then sat down by the judge and the foreman still remained standing. There was not a sound, and for over a minute people seemed to be dumb-stricken. Then there was a faint sob—a low wailing moan. It came from the corner where the little old mother of Spies sat, and it was the signal for the outbreak of murmurs which ran over the assemblage.

"Quiet! Everybody sit down," and the judge's voice came clear and distinct. But even his authority could not prevent the expressions of surprise and outburst of pent up feelings and the suppressed murmur of anguish that came from the friends of the condemned men. The unfortunate defendants themselves said nothing. Not even did they move. They only looked—and into space. It was as if all hope had gone and now, for the first time, they knew their lives had been a failure.

The judge was the first to make a move. Stepping to the front he ordered that the jurors be polled. Each juror was then asked if the verdict expressed his true conviction and if he agreed in the verdict.

In answer there came a firm but low "I do."

As they reached the door, Lingg turned and looked at his sweetheart, and his anguish was apparent by the tears in his eyes. As her eyes met those of her lover, tears burst out afresh. Grim Michael Schwab turned, and he was just in time to hear a shriek from his wife and see her fall against a seat. He made a motion towards her, but collected himself and went out with the others.

Then the judge glanced for the first time at the prisoners and their friends. He then allowed his eyes to rest for a moment on the cringing form of the little old mother, weeping. Then bringing his eyes to the jury again, he told them they had done their work well. You have listened attentively to the evidence, given every detail, both for and against the prisoners your close attention, and your verdict is an expression of your convictions. This has been a long and tedious trial, but you have served well. I thank you for your attention.

The judge then, in a few words, discharged the jury and notified them that they were at liberty to go. There was not one of the twelve good and true men but looked thankful and drew a sigh of relief. The jury then rose and filed out of the room, and the bailiffs made their way to the sides of the prisoners. Not one word escaped any one of the eight. Their faces still wore the same vacant look and as they rose from their seats and followed the bailiffs it was with slow and unsteady steps.

"Ach Gott!" shrieked the wife, "Ach Gott!" Then her utterances took the form of ravings and she fell back in a dead faint. Restoratives were applied and when she regained consciousness again she resumed her cries. Some of her female friends quieted her and even Judge Gary came down from the bench and looked pityingly at her. She was taken out of the room and the others followed.

Mrs. Parsons did not seem very much agitated, though she bit her lips and looked at the judge with strained eyes. Spies' mother lay clinging to her daughter's dress and tears gushed from her eyes freely. The other women also wept and the crowd in the street stood aside in a respectful manner to let them pass.

Judge Gary came down shortly after, and a great many persons lifted their hats as he passed. The court room was cleared and the people went to their homes and their work. The trial of the "reds" was over. Before adjourning Judge Gary set the time for any motions by the defense for next Thursday.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—During the excitement and exultation upon the streets attendant upon the verdict a wooden-legged newspaper vender on the corner of Washington and La Salle streets, named Henry Bendixer, better known as "Corky," remarked in a loud tone that "The jury ought to be hanged." Instantly the crowd of citizens put their pennies in their pockets and moved on the fellow with shouts of "Hang him, Lynch him," etc. Officer C. J. Morris, of the Central detail of police, broke through the excited throng and rescued the fellow before violent hands were laid upon him. He was taken to the Central station where, with pale face and trembling voice, he said he was but jesting. Nevertheless he was taken to a cell amid the shouts of approval of a number of excited citizens.

Mr. Grinnell, his assistants, Messrs. Ingham, Walker and Furthmann, Mr. Foster and Inspector Bonfield, sat in the former's office chatting an hour after the verdict was rendered. "I feel very sorry for the jurors," said Mr. Foster, impressively. "If the day ever comes that the ropes are placed about the necks of these prisoners the members of the jury will not be out of danger. I have urged the prisoners to have all their friends exercise their influence against violence between now and the end of the case."

"I want to say," interrupted Inspector Bonfield, "that if any violence is done by the friends of these men that the lamp posts of the city of Chicago will bear fruit. In my opinion the police will be powerless to quell the popular rage and public vengeance will be summarily wrecked upon all the friends and pronounced sympathizers of anarchy."

When the reporters were admitted to the jail at four o'clock yesterday afternoon all the prisoners had apparently regained their composure. Parsons, as usual, was talkative and perfectly willing to express his views. He appeared calm and collected, and was evidently posing as a martyr. When asked what his opinion of the verdict was, he said: "There was popular clamor for our death. There was an insatiable thirst for blood. The beasts of capitalists have secured their ends. It is labor led to the scaffold in chains. I consider the verdict simply a war of capital against labor. What could we do? We are all poor men, while the men who were back of the prosecution have plenty of money at their command. All the officers of the court were prejudiced against us. The judge was unjust in his rulings. Grinnell was actuated by malice and hate. I have been a workingman all my life. I have advocated the labor cause, and if it is for this that I am to die, I will mount the scaffold with a firm step. While not a fatalist, I consider that I am the creature of circumstances. Have I hope? Well, you know what Pope says: 'Hope springs eternal in the human breast.' Of course we hope. We shall carry it to the Supreme Court and see if the constitution is worth the paper it is written on."

Referring to the theory of who threw the bomb, Parsons said he considered it the work of an irresponsible crank who had no connection with the Socialists and was not in sympathy with them. "Who knows," said he, "but what it was thrown by a man from McCormick's—one of the strikers who had seen his brother shot down the day before. He could have attended our meeting that night, thrown the bomb and the blame be attached to us. Any one could buy a bomb for fifteen cents. I do not believe that Schnaubelt ever threw that bomb. He has simply fled to avoid the violence of the police. We have been convicted without a vestige of law. We are Anarchists—that is enough. And let me tell you what that word 'Anarchy' means. It is from the Greek words 'Archy-Ruler,' and 'An'—no, meaning 'no ruler.' Is there any crime in that? Our enemies have construed it to mean force and annihilation."

Mrs. Parsons said she did not care to talk about the case. She was surprised beyond all measure at the verdict. She did not see how it could be rendered according to law. If her husband was hanged he would be hanged in a just cause and was innocent of the crime of which he was charged. She warned her husband against talking too much to the reporters.

Spies said he had nothing to say. The verdict simply meant a war against the organization of labor.

Engel, who only speaks German, expressed himself pretty freely in his native tongue. He said the judge was one-sided. The police perjured themselves and every one was prejudiced against the prisoners. The verdict was a cooked-up affair he said. He asserted that he had never had any trouble in his life and denied that he had been imprisoned thirteen years in the old country. It was shown that the verdict had been arrived at before hand owing to the quickness with which the jury had arrived at an agreement. He had had no idea of being hanged, but was ready to die for the principle which he maintained. He, for himself, expected an acquittal, but there was no use trying to fight monopolies.

Neebe said he was glad he had received a sentence, for had he been acquitted it would have been bad for the other prisoners. There was no case against him whatever, and the mere fact that he had been sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary, when there was no evidence against him, would shown what an unfair trial it was and call attention to the others. The verdict was a great surprise to him. He expected either a light sentence all around or an acquittal. He did not believe that if the law points were carefully considered they would hold.

Fielden and Schwab refused to be interviewed or even talk with any one except their friends. Lingg and Fischer remained in their cells.

THE YEAR'S CROPS.

The Late Rains Have Broken the Drought and There are Now Prospects of a Fair Crop of Corn—The Wheat Crop Falls 15,000,000 Bushels Short of an Average.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 20.—The Cincinnati Price Current of yesterday says: More or less heavy rainfall has occurred in various sections of the West the past week, notably in the Ohio valley and portions of Iowa and Illinois, while moderate rainfall has reached a very considerable breadth. In some localities in Kansas, where the drought had been very severe, late rains have aggregated a fall of eight to ten inches.

These rains of the past week and previously have broken the drought in a large portion of the West, but a great extent of the corn crop west of Indiana was beyond being restored to any approach to nominal conditions. With a favorable autumn, however, much will result in lessening the extent of damage to the corn crop. Scarcely second in importance to the influence upon corn is the beneficial effect of these late rains upon pastures and water supplies for stock, an important relief now being secured in these particulars.

In regard to the general situation of the corn crop there is little to be added to what has been said. There seems to be little room for doubt of a curtailment of the crop, amounting to 300,000,000 to 400,000,000, compared with last year.

The wheat-producing countries of the world, exclusive of the United States and Canada, promise an aggregate of fully 1,500,000,000 bushels this season, or 3,500,000 bushels below an average production. In the United States and Canada the production will be about 75,000,000 bushels greater than last year, or say 15,000,000 short of what may be accepted as an average, so that the year's wheat crop of the world, as now indicated, will fall 50,000,000 bushels short of an average product.

If these calculations be justified by actual results and it be considered that the United States has an available surplus of previous growth amounting to 30,000,000 bushels, with practically nominal stocks abroad.

During the past year the United States exported 95,000,000 bushels of wheat, flour included. With a crop of fully 453,000,000 bushels of this year's growth and available surplus of previous growth of 30,000,000 bushels in excess of needed reserves, the available supply is approximately 465,000,000 bushels, from which can be spared for export 120,000,000 to 135,000,000 bushels.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

Instructions to General Reyes in Case the Warlike Texans Should Precipitate a Conflict.

MONTEREY, Mex., Aug. 11.—The recent arrival of Colonel Pedro Valdez bearing confidential dispatches from President Diaz to the Military Governor of this State, General Reyes, causes serious comment in official circles. It is learned from a prominent State official, whose name cannot be made public, that definite instructions have been issued as to the course to be pursued by General Reyes in case the warlike Texans should precipitate a conflict on the border before the general governments conclude diplomatic correspondence in the Cutting case. Every preparation is being made to quickly concentrate the frontier troops wherever they may be needed. Large quantities of ammunition have already been forwarded to available points. The Government telegraph lines, heretofore sadly neglected and in some places entirely abandoned, are now being rapidly repaired. Public feeling is not in favor of war with the United States, nor is it expected that war will ensue, but a brush with the Texans would be hailed with delight, and the Texans may rest assured of a cordial reception whenever they make their profound call.

General Sedgwick at Paso del Norte.

EL PASO, Tex., Aug. 21.—General Sedgwick arrived here last evening and immediately crossed the river at Paso del Norte where he held a secret conference with Consul Brigham. After the conference, which lasted an hour, he was escorted to the Mexican Central depot where he took a train for the City of Mexico. General Sedgwick's credentials are directed to Minister Jackson and he states that his mission is to that gentleman alone. After conferring with Minister Jackson he will return to Paso del Norte and make a thorough investigation of the Cutting case. The Mexican customs inspector made a thorough inspection of General Sedgwick's baggage at Paso del Norte, although his escort announced him as special envoy from the United States. An envelope containing his credentials and instructions was subjected to thorough scrutiny. General Sedgwick reports that his mission is not a diplomatic one, but simply one of conference and investigation.

Suicide of a Young Man.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 21.—Frederick Pappenheimer, the son of a wealthy New York tobacconist, committed suicide at the residence of S. A. Jarvis yesterday morning by shooting himself through the head. Pappenheimer was engaged in buying tobacco here for his father. He had been permanently located in Louisville since January last and had lived a very examplary life, was highly thought of and apparently doing well in business. He left a note on the table of his sleeping apartment saying his life was a failure and he had concluded to put an end to it. His body will be sent to New York. The young man was twenty-five years of age and unmarried.

A Lyncher Confesses.

EATONTOWN, N. J., Aug. 21.—Joseph Anderson, who fled from here on the morning the body of Mingo Jack, the negro who assaulted a young lady of this place, was found hanging to the door of the lockup last March, is now at his father's very sick with typhoid fever. He is not expected to live. He confessed yesterday to being one of the party who lynched Mingo Jack and implicated several prominent citizens. Officers are guarding the house. If Anderson recovers he will be taken before the grand jury.

Storms in Newfoundland.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Aug. 21.—Accounts are pouring in of the destructive effects of the recent gale. It was the most severe known at St. Pierre for twenty-five years. Much damage was done to building and shipping. Two vessels were wrecked and several men hurt. The crew of the "banker," J. K. Mundell, were exposed on the wreck of that vessel all night in a furious sea. They were rescued one by one next morning by a life-line. It is feared that the Labrador coast fishing fleets have suffered.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—There were 186 failures in the United States and Canada during the last seven days, against 157 last week.

LAND-GRABBERS SCORED.

Forcible Reasons, Plainly Stated, Why Railroad and Other Monopolies, and Greedy Timber Thieves, Do Not Like the Administration.

The first gun of the Indiana campaign, on the Democratic side, was fired by Judge Lewis Jordan, of Indianapolis, in an earnest and able speech lately delivered at Lebanon. After referring to the fact that the navy contractors, steamship companies, Pacific railroads, land and timber thieves et al were all opposed to the present Administration he proceeded to show the reasons for some of this opposition:

The conquest of our vast public domain by the land-grabbers has no parallel in history, and it was all accomplished under the rule of a party which in its infancy said in its Chicago platform that lands should not be granted to corporations, but reserved for actual settlers. [illegible] How the Republican party had reached manhood, in fourteen years it had given away to corporations [illegible] acres of your land. Future generations will be amazed when they read of these princely gifts and will compare them with no favorable opinion to the gifts made by conquering kings to their generals and favorite followers. The people of this country, be they Republicans, Democrats, Greenbackers or Mugwumps, have not yet had their eyes fully opened as to how lavishly the Republican party has made gifts of the public domain to favorite friends. This [illegible] acres would make nine States the size of Indiana. It is twice the amount of land in Great Britain and more than in France or Germany. It would make [illegible] homesteads of forty acres each.

Prior to 1862 not a foot of public land had been given to corporations, and it was only when the Democratic party in 1874 elected a majority of the lower house of Congress that a halt was called in these princely gifts.

So scandalous did these gifts become that even a leading Republican newspaper of the West, in a lucid moment of honesty, denounced Congress for making a gift enterprise of the public domain, and complimented a distinguished Democratic member of Congress from Indiana for "never having failed to oppose vigorously every one of these measures of public plunder." The railroads have been selling these lands at an average price of $4.31 per acre, and you can make the calculation yourself and determine the enormous pile they will receive if allowed to keep them all.

But since the books have been opened it has been discovered that the railroad companies were not satisfied with the strict terms of the act of Congress and the amount allowed to them, but have had decisions made by the General Land Office that gave them millions of acres not contemplated by the acts. Every demand made upon that office was promptly honored, and because they can not control the present Commissioner—Mr. Sparks—the whole brood have been hounding him down, and their allies, the Republican press, have joined in the cry.

The grant to the Union and Central Pacific railroads, forty miles wide from the Missouri river to the bay of San Francisco, and that to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe is also forty miles wide. The Atlantic and Pacific is eighty miles wide, and that to the Northern Pacific is one hundred and twenty miles wide in the Territories. But these swaths were not wide enough for the grasping sharks, so they go to the General Land Office and are allowed to select what they call indemnity lands outside of these limits. In many cases these lands had been entered, patented and settled, and at the command of the sharks the owners were driven off and made beggars.

If, during the coming canvass, you hear some wheezy Republican speaker ask: "When are you going to open the books?" tell him the books have been opened and disclosed the inhuman and brutal treatment of the Western pioneer by the sharks who issued their orders through the General Land Office while it was administered by Republican officials.

We need not go to Ireland to witness the despotic and cruel rule of landlordism. Right here in our own land have been practiced outrages on the Western pioneer that have no parallel in the Green Isle. They have been robbed of their homes by a great Government, which had received pay for it, and all this done in the interest of the great railroad corporations. Thanks to a Democratic Administration, this has all been stopped.

But the railroad companies to-day are holding on to 96,000,000 acres more than they are entitled to, being a territory large enough to make three States the size of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. They have not earned these lands, but are holding on to them with a death-like grip. The struggle is now going on in Congress and the eyes of the Western people are turned to Washington. The big fight is over the Northern Pacific grant. The Democratic House says this bloated corporation has 30,000,000 acres more than they have any right to, while the Senate, looking through Republican glasses, says the amount is only 6,000,000 acres. It is some consolation to have the Senate acknowledge even this last number. "Justice travels with a leaden heel but strikes with an iron hand," and I hope the day is not far distant when all those lands will be reclaimed and opened to private entry.

But the railroads are not alone in their raids upon the public lands. They have formidable rivals in the land monopoly companies which are organized all over the Territories. Those companies have carried on their stealing of the public lands with perfect system. Their mode of operation has been to employ wild, irresponsible scoundrels to mount their horses and gallop over the prairie, and then return and proclaim for all the land they have passed over. These claims are then transferred to the land companies, which are composed largely of foreigners. By such outrageous frauds Scotch and English landlords have obtained estates in our country which surpass in extent and fertility those held by them at home. An English syndicate holds 3,000,000 acres in Texas, and the Holland Land Company 4,500,000 acres in New Mexico. Among the English Lords I find the Marquis of Tweedale owns 1,750,000 acres, the Duke of Sutherland 425,000 acres, Lord Houghton 60,000 acres, and Lord Dunraven, in Colorado, 60,000 acres. Special agents have found that an English firm has obtained 100,000 acres of the choicest red-wood lands in California. The books have not been fully opened and read, but so far it has been found that foreigners own 20,747,000 acres of our public domain. The foundations have been laid for carving out several Irelands in our own country. These startling figures confirm the plea that it was time "to open the books," discharge the book-keeper and place an honest man in charge of the General Land Office. Should your local Republican newspaper ask: "When are you going to open the books?" give him some of the facts I have furnished you, and, my word for it, his organ will cease to grind out the question. It is the examination of these fraudulent entries that has raised such a howl all along the Republican line. In one year, ending March 31, 1886, 2,223 of these entries were canceled or held up for further hearing and more than 300,000 acres reclaimed for bona fide settlers. This does not include the large number of entries which have been canceled for fraud which has been developed by individual contests, and the books are being opened every day. The great reform goes on, and Mr. Sparks is making the sparks fly wherever his hands reach.

The cattle kings have had a regular picnic, and have taken possession of the remainder of the public lands not gobbled up by the railroad corporations, the land companies and the English lords. Criminal and civil suits in fifty-six cases were brought the first year of the Administration against these robbers, and possession of 1,652,315 acres recovered. In forty other cases fences were removed from around 566,183 acres. The cattle kings are about as lawless as their bulls, and the strong arm of the Government had to be evoked to drive them out of the Indian reservations.

The railroad companies, the land companies, the English lords and the cattle kings operated in the open country, and left the forests for the timber thieves. During the first year of the Administration 515 criminal cases and 256 civil cases were commenced against these timber thieves. The amount involved in the civil suits was $5,501,870.09, and thus you see how extensive the depredations were. Of course they were all opposed to opening the books, and are also opposed to opening the doors of the penitentiary.

I would like to refer in detail to the frauds sanctioned by the Republican Administrations in surveying private land grants in New Mexico, Colorado and Arizona. The history reads like a romance, but unfortunately the romance is founded on facts. The Spanish and Mexican land claims are the foundation for all this rascality. I can only give you a few specimens. Mr. Martinez has a grant which was limited to 48,000 acres. Survey is made, and he is given 594,515 acres, and the patent issued. Salvador Gonzales, in 1742, was granted by New Mexico "a spot of land to enable him to plant a corn-field for the support of his family." A Republican Administration surveyed this corn-field, and gave him 103,959 acres. This discounts the big corn-fields on the Wabash, and is conclusive evidence that Mr. Gonzales had a very numerous family that lived principally on corn.

Those are only specimen cases of the hundreds which have been admitted and fraudulent surveys made, so that there is very little public land left in New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado. The Spanish and Mexican claims have been bought up by men like Dorsey, who are all unanimous that the Republican party should be returned to power. Mr. Sparks says of the General Land Office: "I found this office a mere instrumentality in the hands of surveying rings," and says "it shall not be such during the present incumbency."

In all this great work the commissioner has the backing of the President, who stands up firm and grand as the cedars of Lebanon. The great mission of his Administration is to reclaim the public domain from the land sharks and grabbers, and thus make it possible for millions of freemen to find happy homes in the great West. In this great undertaking he should receive the hearty support of men of all parties, and I do not hesitate to say that in no part of this broad land will he have a more enthusiastic following than in our own State.

THE MIGHTY DEAD.

Toll for the mighty dead,
In bells through all the land
While with [illegible] hand
[illegible]
A[illegible] passed away
To fairer lands—to brighter day.

When foul corruption's foot
Had [illegible] all our [illegible]
He grasped Ithuriel's spear
[illegible]
The baffled hosts of darkness fled
When he [illegible]

Led by his guiding light
The Right's [illegible] grew strong;
He [illegible]
He trampled down the wrong;
And now [illegible]
[illegible] his hallowed years.

A Nation's grateful hand
Its highest gift bestowed
The [illegible] of the land
[illegible] truth and justice rode
[illegible]
Nor drew the sword to win his right.

Toll for the mighty dead,
In bells with solemn sound,
While now his revered head
We lay in hallowed ground,
An uncrowned king he reigns for aye
In fairer lands—in brighter day.

A GREAT MAN'S TRIBUTES.

A Few of the Thousands of Glowing Words Which Have Been Offered to the Memory of Samuel J. Tilden by Men of Both Political Parties.

——He was a political philosopher besides being a practical politician, skilled in all the arts of management.—Boston Transcript.

——Mr. Tilden was the ablest Democratic statesman of his generation, and the peer of the ablest of any party.—Philadelphia Times.

——The State of New York has lost her most distinguished son and the Nation one of its wisest and most patriotic counselors.—President Grover Cleveland.

——Mr. Tilden was justly and universally regarded as the foremost, the wisest and the ablest Democrat of his time. His name will take its place beside those of the distinguished dead who stood intellectually as Sauls among the people.—N. Y. Morning Journal.

——He was a leader who put his party on the path to victory and his country on the plane of a nobler destiny. He was a patriot who turned away the tides of civil war. He was a sage who let no consideration of ambition move him in the still air of delightful studies.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Tilden and Hayes.

The burial of Mr. Tilden ends forever the hope passionately shared by many of his countrymen that the great crime against him and free institutions might be directly and signally condemned by re-electing him to the office of which he was defrauded. That hope is dust now, but none the less the accomplices in that crime have been found guilty by the opinion of mankind, and their sentence will not be mitigated by history.

It is now generally admitted by Republicans that Mr. Tilden was elected President. Ten years have produced a striking change in the feeling of all but the bitterest and most wrong-headed of his opponents. The cause of justice of the American people was not appealed to in vain, and Mr. Tilden had the satisfaction in the last years of his life of knowing that the party which committed and profited by the crime had ceased for the most part to deny or palliate it. Those who remember how eagerly and generally it was defended by the Republicans nine years ago will understand the change.

To Mr. Tilden this changed attitude of the Republicans might seem like a tardy apology for a crime beyond apology and forgiveness. But not more striking than the respect and honor which Mr. Tilden's political opponents show for his character and his services, is the deep and general contempt into which the miserable man has fallen who got by fraud the office to which Mr. Tilden was elected. For Hayes, even in his own party, there is no respect. The outcast of politics, he has no friends in any party, and is regarded by all with the contempt which his career and his qualities deserve.—N. Y. Sun.

His Hearing Was Good.

Mr. Tilden, in making some improvements recently, had need of a skillful engineer to lay off some ground for him back of his farm. One day the Governor drove out to see how the work was going on. The workmen, as they usually do at his approach, took off their hats. Mr. Tilden spoke to Miss Gould, who asked the engineer how the work was coming on. The man took off his hat, walked close up to the side of the T-cart where Mr. Tilden was sitting, and yelled:

"We're coming on all right, Guv'nor," and added, in a low tone of voice to himself: "Why the dickens don't he stay in the house?"

Mr. Tilden's eyes sparkled, and laying his left hand on the man's sleeve he motioned for him to put his ear down to his mouth, and in a low voice said:

"My hearing is very good."

The man's face was a picture; white, red, then white again. Then timidly lifting his eyes to the Governor's face, he took off his hat and asked his pardon. Mr. Tilden simply smiled, and motioned for Riley to drive on.—N. Y. Star.

Veteran vs. Demagogue.

That the soldiers have no sympathy with the demagogues who seek to capture the "soldier vote" by pushing extravagant pension bills is demonstrated by the action of the Grand Army of the Republic at San Francisco recently. The scheme for giving a pension of eight dollars a month to every surviving soldier and sailor, whether he is disabled or not, was brought forward by a representative from Massachusetts, where, oddly enough, it has its chief strength, and after thorough discussion it was rejected by a vote of 327 to 86, or almost exactly four to one. Such a declaration ought not to be lost upon the Blair school of politicians, who have been insulting the soldiers by proposing to treat them as mendicants.—N. Y. Post.

POETS AS HUSBANDS.

The Effect of Marriage and Its Burdens Upon Men of Letters.

Some of the names in our list of men of letters who were married are not those of authors who depended or depend, for some are still living, on their writings for subsistence, but nearly all depend on their writings for their reputation. As all of these men were husbands and most of them fathers, such a list may serve to show that husbands and fathers need not despair of achieving reputation as authors, though in literature, as in other pursuits, a man generally secures some measure of success before he marries. This, however, is far from being always the case.

The married poets, it will be noticed, are numerous. Few of the best are missing. This is exactly as might have been expected. The genuine poet is above all things a lover. If some eminent poets are missing from our list—which, by the way, does not pretend to be exhaustive—it would be rash to accuse them of insensibility to fascination of the fair, for by the missing name there usually hangs a sad tale of disappointed love. Camoens, for example, was twice banished because of his passion for one of the "Queen's ladies" at the court of Lisbon, and, although his love was returned, the fates were so unkind that she died before he could claim her.

It would take a volume to notice all the interesting facts about authors and their wives. Here are a few. Of Tycho Brahe we read that "being a great admirer of the fair sex, he conceived a violent inclination for Christina, a beautiful country girl, the daughter of a neighboring peasant, and alienated his family till the King commanded them to be reconciled to him." John Knox, in spite of his Blast of the Trumpet Against the Monstrous Regiment of Women, married two of them and had children by both.

Sir John Mandeville "religiously declined an honorable alliance to the Sultan of Egypt, whose daughter he might have espoused if he would have abjured Christianity." Burton, as far as we have been able to learn, was never married. This again is as we expected. The Anatomy of Melancholy is not that kind of book that any body but a lonely bachelor would think of writing. Young, author of Night Thoughts, married a lady with money, and so did Dr. Johnson. Cruden, the author of the Concordance, tried to do the same and addressed numerous pamphlets to the object of his choice, but she remained obdurate in spite of these and other extraordinary means of wooing.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Russian Criminal Statistics.

The Russian Empire contains 881 penitentiary establishments (at least that is the number of which the Administration of Prisons publishes any account.) Their occupants on the 1st of January last year numbered 84,515 of both sexes, an excess of nearly 8 per cent. above the returns of the preceding twelve months. Of these persons the ordinary houses of detention contained 68,000, the correct prisons, 6,500, the reformatories 8,000, the prisons in Poland, 8,000. The proportion of women was less than 10 per cent. of the whole, but in the kingdom of Poland the women amounted to 16 per cent. of the incarcerated (probably owing to their participation in political agitation.) Nearly three-quarters of a million arrests take place in the year.—London Times.

—Dr. Charles Woodhouse, of Rutland, Vt., is the owner of two very interesting letters. One is the letter in which Colonel Ethan Allen announced to the Albany committee his capture of Ticonderoga and called for reinforcements. It is dated May 12, 1775, the day after the capture, is written in Allen's bold hand, and describes the capture of the fort substantially as it is described in Ethan Allen's "Narrative." The other is a letter of Lafayette to the committee, written by a secretary in English, and bearing the autograph signature of the Marquis.

—In a lawyer's office. The advocate and his client are arguing about the fee. "It seems to me," said the latter, "that $2,000 for a single speech is just a trifle 'steep,' don't you think so?" "My dear sir, allow me to explain. As yours is one of those cases I am sure to lose, my reputation at the bar will naturally suffer, and from this point of view I do not consider the sum named an excessive compensation."—German Joke.

Every Woman Knows Them.

The human body is much like a good clock or watch in its movements; if one goes too slow or too fast, so follow all the others, and bad time results. If one organ or set of organs works imperfectly, perversion of functional effort of all the organs is sure to follow. Hence it is that the numerous ailments which make woman's life miserable are the direct issue of the abnormal action of the uterine system. For all that numerous class of symptoms—and every woman knows them—there is one unfailing remedy, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the favorite of the sex.

Distress After Eating

is one of the many disagreeable symptoms of dyspepsia. Headache, heartburn, sour stomach, faintness and capricious appetite are also caused by this very widespread and growing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves the headache and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Bulgarians Overthrow the Revolutionary Government and Cast the Leaders Into Prison.

Prince Alexander to Return to Bulgaria's Capital—An Alarming State of Affairs at Sofia.

Sofia, Aug. 26.—The Provisional Government created by the Revolutionists has been overthrown. M. Clement, M. Grueff and M. Zankoff, three of its members, have been arrested and thrown into prison and the old Ministry reinstated. The deception practiced upon them by the circulation of the report that Prince Alexander voluntarily abdicated has exasperated the troops and civilians alike, and the revulsion of popular feeling in favor of the deposed ruler is as general as it is intense. A deputation has been sent in search of the dethroned Prince to persuade him to return to the palace and resume the direction of the affairs of the country.

Bucharest, Aug. 26.—The commander of the yacht, on which it has been stated Prince Alexander is kept prisoner, has telegraphed from Reni, in Bessarabia, to Sofia asking for instructions. He received orders to convey the Prince back to Sofia. Dispatches from Widdin state that the counter revolution has been successful.

London, Aug. 25.—The government has received a number of important dispatches from the East, and the Marquis of Salisbury has been requested by telegraph to return to London immediately.

BEE LINE WRECK.

A Passenger Train From Cincinnati Dashes Into a Freight—Several Lives Lost.

Columbus, O., Aug. 26.—Vague information has been received of a terrible collision which occurred between ten and eleven o'clock to-night, at the crossing of the Bee Line and Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburgh railroad, at Milford Center. A Panhandle freight was standing on the track when a Bee Line through passenger train from Cincinnati dashed into it at full speed. The marshal of Milford and a citizen standing near by were struck by debris, and the marshal killed and the other seriously wounded. One passenger was instantly killed and several severely wounded. The fireman of the passenger is missing, and, it is thought, is beneath the wreck. Among the killed in the wreck at Milford to-night was Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Sam Landon, of the Ohio House, whose home was at Marysville.

Attempt to Wreck an Excursion Train.

Joliet, Ill., Aug. 25.—An excursion train of five coaches, having on board about three hundred passengers from Aurora, arrived in this city, to-day, over the new road, the Joliet, Aurora and Northern. Ties and logs were discovered in three different places on the track in time to prevent a wreck. The obstructions were all discovered within a mile of each other, and the railroad officers think they were placed there by some one whose property was condemned or purchased at too low a price by the company. This was the first excursion over the road.

Death-Ride Down a Mountain Side.

Asheville, N. C., Aug. 25.—This afternoon part of a construction train on the Asheville and Spartanburg railroad, while ascending a heavy grade of the mountain section, between Tryon City and Saluda, broke loose, flying down the mountain with frightful speed. Overseer Swift and four convicts were hurled from the flat cars and killed. A guard was seriously injured, and seven convicts were injured. The cars did not leave the track, but did not stop until they reached Tryon City.

Cutting's Address.

El Paso, Tex., Aug. 25.—Cutting has issued an address to his fellow-citizens of the United States, thanking them for their firmness in demanding his release. He also commends Secretary Bayard's action, but gives Consul Brigham the chief credit for ably conducting the negotiations which led to the abridgement of his confinement. Mr. Cutting embraces the opportunity to set forth at considerable length his views upon the duty of the United States in regard to the protection of its citizens in other countries.

The New Oleo Stamp

Washington, Aug. 25.—The work upon the models for the oleomargarine tax stamps has been delayed by the absence of the Assistant Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and they will not be ready for several days. The design is said to be simply a bull trampling a serpent under foot in the center, while around the margin are the words "oleomargarine" and "internal revenue," the denomination of the stamp being indicated in the corners.

A Young Woman's Great Feat.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 25.—Miss Jeanette Larke, a handsome young lady of Youngstown, swam the Niagara river below the rapids, near her home, yesterday afternoon. She was accompanied by Wm. Wilkinson, and the distance was about a mile and a half. Miss Larke reached the Canada shore with very little exhaustion and seemed perfectly fresh, although her companion was very tired. This is the first time a lady has accomplished the feat of swimming the river at this point.

The Whirlpool Rapids Craze.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 25.—Ex-Councilman Chambers, of this city, has decided to swim the whirlpool at Niagara. He says he will start next week, and if nobody interferes with him he will go through the whirlpool without cork jacket, barrel or anything else, depending on his powers as a swimmer to carry him through all right. His belief is that any man can accomplish the task if he keeps cool and does not lose his head.

One Killed and Two Injured.

Windsor, Vt., Aug. 25.—A carriage containing Senator Evarts, of New York; Charles C. Perkins, of Boston, and Miss Matthews, daughter of Judge Stanley Matthews, of Ohio, was overturned this evening. Mr. Perkins was instantly killed, and Senator Evarts and Miss Matthews were severely bruised, though not seriously injured.

Children Killed by a Falling Building.

Sheffield, Eng., Aug. 25.—The walls of a warehouse used for the storage of steel ingots fell to-day, killing and injuring a large number of children who were playing on the pavement beneath. The bodies of seven of those killed have been recovered. Many are still missing.

Beecher's Brother Suicides.

Elmira, N. Y., Aug. 25.—Rev. James Beecher, brother of Henry Ward Beecher, committed suicide at the water cure here this morning. He was the youngest son of Dr. Lyman Beecher.

Another Riot in Belfast.

Belfast, Aug. 25.—Daly's tavern, on Peter's Hill, has again been wrecked by rioters. The mob last night placed chains across the Shankhill road, which tripped the police and troops when they charged the mob. Twenty arrests have been made. The police were terribly stoned.

Warlike Russian Movements.

Vienna, Aug. 25.—The Tagblat says: The Russian Ministers of War and Marine have been summoned to St. Petersburg. The Black Sea fleet has been ordered to be in readiness for a cruise. Several Russian steamship companies have been ordered to equip troop transports.

SORROWS OF SAILORS.

The French Ship L. Emile Goes to the Bottom—Twelve of the Crew Drowned.

New York, Aug. 26.—A St. Johns (N. F.) special to the Herald says: A dispatch from St. Pierre announces the total loss of the French ship L. Emile. She was commanded by Captain Cheval and was manned by a crew of twenty-one fishermen. She was returning, fish laden, with others of the Grand Bank fleet, when, during the prevalence of a dense fog and very boisterous sea, she struck yesterday morning on the reefs of Kellah's Island, Lamalyne, was shattered to pieces and immediately sank. Twelve of her crew were drowned. Nine with the Captain were washed through the boiling surf and landed among the shingles and seaweed of the shore in an apparently lifeless condition.

PRINCE ALEXANDER.

Considering Whether or Not He Will Return to Bulgaria.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—Prince Alexander has arrived at Darmstadt. He received the news of the success of his friends at Sofia and the devotion of the Bulgarian army with deep emotion. The intelligence of the downfall of the Provisional Government was conveyed to him while he was en route to Darmstadt, and with the news came the suggestion that he had better return to Sofia. He telegraphed to his father at Darmstadt that he would visit Darmstadt at all events before returning to Bulgaria, and would then decide whether he would return or not.

Illinois Farmer Killed.

Centralia, Ill., Aug. 26.—'Squire James J. Chambers, aged about sixty years, an old pioneer farmer of Clinton County, residing three miles south-west of here, was instantly killed in this city this morning. He brought a load of wood to town, and while passing through an alley to deliver it the wagon struck an obstruction, throwing him to the ground at the heels of the horses, and the front wheels passed over his breast. His son Thomas was ahead of him a short distance with a load, and, seeing him fall, hurried back to his assistance. The father looked up into his son's eyes and told him he was dying, and before medical aid could be procured he expired.

Pierced Through and Through.

Dexter, Mo., Aug. 26.—A terrible accident happened at Himmethberg & Co.'s sawmill, located at Buffington, a station twelve miles east of Dexter, a man by the name of Baines being struck in the left side by a piece of timber thrown some way from the saw. The timber, which was smaller at one end than the other, entered his side, just below the nipple, and penetrated him through and through, coming out on the other side. Drs. Kendal, of Sikeston, and Bartlett, of Poplar Bluff, were called and the timber removed. The doctors have no hope of his recovery, but he is yet alive and seems to be getting along very well. Baines is from Indiana.

BULGARIAN MUDDLE.

Seems Likelier Every Day to Make Very Serious Trouble.

The Russian Press Demanding the Immediate Occupation of Bulgaria While the Military Authorities are Said to be Making Extensive Preparations for Offensive Operations.

Vienna, Aug. 27.—It is rumored that Russia is making extensive military and naval preparations, and has ordered the movement of the fleet toward the Roumanian coast. It is also rumored that the Berlin and Vienna Courts are making strenuous efforts through Prince Alexander's father to dissuade Alexander from returning to Bulgaria. The Russian press demands the immediate occupation of Bulgaria.

London, Aug. 27.—The reply of the Czar to the address sent him by the Zankoff Government is frigidly worded, although he promises to protect Bulgaria. The Porte has received replies from the various powers to its circular announcing Prince Alexander's deposition. With the exception of Italy the different governments merely note the contents of the circular, reserving all ulterior communications. The reply of Italy in addition recognizes the Porte's right to protest against the illegality of Prince Alexander's deposition. At a mass meeting held at Slivno, Roumelia, it was unanimously resolved to support Prince Alexander. Copies of the resolutions were forwarded to the foreign ministers at Bucharest. A meeting at Kasanlik, Roumelia, sent a telegram to the Czar begging him to continue to extend his favors to Bulgaria. The Czar, in answering, assured them of his good will toward the Bulgarians if they would maintain order, and in this task Russian agents would support them.

A Maryland Convict Whose Twelve-Year Term is Concluded Is To Be Transferred For Another Period to Massachusetts.

Baltimore, Aug. 27.—David Peyton, a convict in the Maryland penitentiary under a sentence of twelve years for burglary, will finish his term to-morrow morning. Deputy Sheriff Roseman will be present with a warrant from the Governor of Massachusetts charging Peyton with being an escaped convict from the State prison of that Commonwealth. The deputy will turn him over to Officer Joseph A. Moore, of Boston, and he will go back to Massachusetts. Peyton's residence in the Maryland penitentiary has made a changed man of him—so much so that Warden Horn and other officials have furnished him with testimonials of good conduct, they believing that he is a thoroughly reformed man. He has been commended to the Governor of Massachusetts as deserving of clemency.

SAD END OF A VACATION.

A Young Philadelphian Drowned in Sight of His Betrothed.

Miss Lizzie Cooper, of the same place, to whom he was engaged, saw him go down. She fell upon the sand in a dead faint and had to be carried to her hotel.

Startling Discovery at St. Louis.

St. Louis, Aug. 27.—The vault-cleaners made a discovery in the rear of 1103 South Third street this morning that duplicates the one made last month in the rear of Joe Maserang's saloon on Eastern avenue. They found two human skulls in a vault and enough other arms and legs and ribs to fill a barrel. The premises are being excavated for a pork-house, and when last occupied the old building on the lot was a tenement house and the resort of thieves, thugs and criminals generally. The coroner has taken charge of the bones.

AN EARTHQUAKE.

Six Hundred Persons Killed and Upwards of One Thousand Seriously Injured in Greece.

Athens, Aug. 29.—The area of the district which is affected by earthquakes yesterday, is phenomenally large, especially as to width, and at least six towns have been entirely destroyed, while a score of others are partially demolished. On the main land there has been great damage to property, but comparatively little loss of life. On the islands the deadly effect of the disturbances has been most severe, and it is estimated that 600 persons have been killed and upward of 1,000 seriously injured. The undulations of the earth were singularly regular in their occurrence and the actual shocks averaged twelve seconds each in duration. The inhabitants everywhere in the disturbed districts have abandoned the houses still standing, and all are camping out in the fields. The breaking of the telegraph wires by the upheavals has made it almost impossible to obtain details, and it is believed that the reports already received underestimate the damage and loss of life. The Greek Cabinet is in continuous session, and a transport with tents, food, physicians, medicines and a company of pompiers started for the stricken districts Saturday evening.

WESTERN EXPLORERS.

The Hitherto Unknown Features of Crater Lake, in Oregon, Brought to Light.

Washington, Aug. 29.—A party sent out by the Geological Survey, under the command of Captain Clarence E. Dutton, U. S. A., has succeeded in reaching and making a complete survey of Crater Lake, in Oregon, a body of water whose shores, with the possible exception of one point on the south, have never before been touched by the foot of white men. The party boats were hauled a hundred miles by mule teams, dragged by a detail of soldiers up the snow-clad sides of the ridge which surrounds the lake, and lowered by ropes from the crest of the water, nine hundred feet below. One hundred and sixty soundings were made, the result of which gave the general character of the lake bottom. Two large submerged cinder cones were found, respectively 800 and 1,200 feet high, the rest of the bottom being flat. Captain Dutton believes this to be the deepest body of fresh water on the continent. The greatest depth attained by the sounding line was 2,005 feet.

Married His Step-Mother.

Sea Girt, State Camp, N. J., Aug. 29.—A wedding, which interested many of the soldiers encamped here, took place Thursday night at Manasquan, a small village adjoining Sea Girt. Washington Parks, a furniture manufacturer of Philadelphia, was married to his step-mother, Mrs. Parks. The bride was the widow of her present husband's father, the late Richard Parks, who was in the tassel business in Philadelphia. She is twenty-six years of age, and married the elder Parks three years ago. He died, leaving an estate estimated to be worth $125,000, which was divided between the widow and his two children. One of the conditions named in the will was that in the event of the widow marrying again she would forfeit the estate and the money would revert to the son, Washington Parks. Inasmuch as the widow was married again she forfeits her $125,000, but in conformity with the terms implied in the will the estate goes to her husband. Mr. Parks always manifested great fondness for his young step-mother, which eventually ripened into love. He, too, is twenty-six years of age.

Frenzied Naples.

Naples, Aug. 29.—Mount Vesuvius is now in a violent state of eruption, and the people living in its vicinity have fled to the interior, where they are congregated in open fields, spending the most of their time in prayer and supplication. Naples is almost depopulated, and the few people who remain are also panic-stricken. The open spaces and squares of the city are filled with men and women upon their knees offering up prayer to stay the eruptions and save their lives. The same state of consternation exists at Bari, where the priests are proclaiming that the eruption is a visitation of God because of the wickedness of the people. A consequent wakening of religious fervor has taken place. Nearly every person in the town can be seen in a devotional attitude at almost any time in the day or night.

—Gingham was first manufactured in the United States by Erastus Bigelow, at Clinton, Mass., in 1846. It was the first attempt to manufacture the fabric mentioned by machinery, and enabled the American manufacturers to compete successfully with those of England.

CONVICT LABOR.

Northwestern Manufacturers Meet at Chicago and Denounce the System—A National Association Formed—Prohibitory Legislation Demanded.

Chicago, Aug. 27.—A number of prominent manufacturers from all over the country gathered at eleven o'clock yesterday morning in the parlor of the Grand Pacific Hotel. The assembly was in response to a call issued last July by Mr. W. T. Lewis, a prominent wagon and carriage manufacturer of Racine, Wis. Mr. Lewis has for a long time had under consideration the subject of convict labor and its ravages in the field occupied by honest working men. The objects of the convention were to consider means of abolishing the present system of convict labor and devising means of employing the prisoners confined in the penitentiary. The meeting was called to order at 11:15 o'clock, with about two dozen manufacturers present. Mr. Lewis was elected chairman and Mr. Kinney, of Winona, Minn., secretary.

Communications from wardens of the penitentiaries in the various States, in answer to a circular asking for information as to the employment and condition of the convicts, were read. From the reports it seemed as though the boot and shoe, wagon-making and stocking manufacturing interests were mostly interested in the prison-labor question. In Florida the convicts are let out to the contractors for naval stores. In Tennessee 10,000 vehicles are manufactured at a rate of wages averaging thirty-five cents per day. In Louisiana the prisoners are employed on the levees, being let out to contractors, who pay all expenses and relieve the State of all cost except the apprehension and conviction of the convicts. The wardens of the various prisons differed in their opinions on the subject of the damage done to honest labor by the convict system, but the weight of opinion seems to be expressed by one of the wardens, who said: "I can conceive of no branch of labor which is performed by convicts at wages of from fifteen to sixty cents per day that can not be performed by honest working men and pay them ten times the wages."

The chairman said it was impossible for manufacturers employing free labor to compete with the contract-convict system. At present convicts are making goods equal to those made by honest tradesmen for sometimes one-tenth the price. This brought about the degradation of honest toil, and honest toilers were loth to learn a trade that opened no hope to future advancement.

The committee on organization, selected at the morning session, reported after the noon recess, and a constitution and by-laws were adopted. The organization will be known as the National Anti-Convict Contract Association. Its object shall be the thorough investigation of the subject of convict labor, for the purpose of discovering and securing the adoption of that method of employing prison population in the various States in a manner which shall be least burdensome and oppressive to free labor and the manufacturing interests of the country. The annual membership fee was fixed at ten dollars for manufacturers and fifty cents for laborers and mechanics. Labor organizations can be admitted, and are entitled to one delegate on the payment of five dollars. State organizations will also be formed with the same object in view.

The election of officers for the organization resulted as follows: President, W. T. Lewis, Racine, Wis.; secretary and treasurer, George S. Redfield, Chicago; Executive Committee, Charles H. Deere, Moline; J. W. Hinton, Winona; George Curtis, Clinton, Ia.; Mr. Berky, Grand Rapids; Stephen Bull, Racine; Colonel J. A. Sexton, Chicago; J. L. Smyser, Louisville. Eight vice-presidents were also chosen.

W. C. Nones submitted a resolution instructing the executive committee to inquire into the constitutionality of a law to be passed by Congress prohibiting the sale of goods the product of convict labor outside of the State in which manufactured, and, no constitutional objections being found, that they be instructed to procure the passage of such a law by Congress. This was adopted, and the secretary was instructed to issue a circular calling upon manufacturers to join the association. Another resolution passed was to the effect that the association favors the establishment of one or more federal prisons, not upon the contract-labor system, in order to withdraw from State prisons the federal prisoners now confined in them who are largely worked upon the contract system, and to give the influence of the Federal Government to a better system of prison labor.

A committee of five was appointed to formulate a method of employing convict labor, taking the place of the contract and lease system, which should be less oppressive to the labor and industries of this country, the committee to report before January 1, 1887, to enable the members of the association to present their plan or plans to the various State Legislatures.

Finally the association adopted a resolution urgently requesting Congress to prohibit by law the purchasing of any goods produced in whole or part by convict labor, for use in any of the Government departments. The meeting then adjourned sine die.

The Farmers' Congress.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 27.—The Farmers' Congress yesterday passed resolutions asking Congress to create the office of Secretary of Agriculture, the incumbent to be a member of the Cabinet; requesting the extension of the civil-service to all telegraph stations; asking Congress to regulate inter-State commerce in such a manner as to protect productive industries; recommending an appropriation of $3,000,000 to stamp out contagious diseases among domestic animals; requesting that the ministers to France and Germany be instructed to prevent restrictions upon American farm products properly shipped; recommending the restoration of the wool tariff of 1867, and the maintenance of that on rice and sugar; requesting State Legislatures to pass laws against dealing in futures; approving the Oleomargarine law; providing for the incorporation of the Farmers' congress, and requesting the farmers of each State to form subordinate bodies. Skipped the Country.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 27.—John Kidd, of the World's Collection Bureau and other enterprises, left the city for parts unknown recently. His indebtedness is estimated to be all the way from $20,000 to $32,000, and in the majority of cases it falls upon persons ill able to lose it, several of them being widows who depended upon their annuities for support, the handling of which he secured in such a way that while he was financially responsible, yet he could not be pursued in a criminal prosecution.

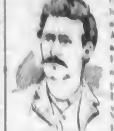
Impending Famine in Texas.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 27.—E. L. Walker, county judge of Stephens County, arrived here yesterday seeking aid to avert starvation in his county, which he says is entirely denuded of grass, without crops, and with only post-oak and mesquite leaves for stock food. About one-third of the population have exhausted all supplies, and the remainder are mostly without bread or meat and needing outside aid to save them from starvation. Cattle are dying in large numbers, and unless moved to the ranges none can survive the winter. Shackleford, Young, Palo Pinto, Throckmorton, Eastland and Baylor Counties, he says, are but little better off.

DOOMED ANARCHISTS.

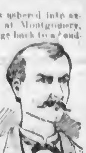
Sketches of the Men Sentenced for Instigating the Haymarket Tragedy in Chicago.

August Theodore Vincent Spies was born at Landeck, Province Hesse-Nassau, Germany, in 1855. He landed in New York City in 1872, where he apprenticed himself as an upholsterer. A year afterward he arrived in Chicago. In 1876 he started a small furniture repairing shop on West Lake street. The next year he removed to North Clark street, forming a partnership with his brother Ferdinand. In the spring he was a candidate for West side collector on the Socialistic Labor ticket, but was defeated, after which he became a reporter on the Arbeiter-Zeitung. He after became the manager and at the time of his arrest he was its editor in chief.



AUGUST SPIES.

Albert R. Parsons was ushered into existence June 20, 1848, at Montgomery, Ala. He traces his lineage back to a handful of emigrants who settled around Narragansett Bay in 1632. His mother died when he was only two years old and his father followed her three years after. In 1857 he removed to Tyler County, Tex., and in 1859 he was put on the Galveston Daily News to learn the "art preservative of all art." When the war broke out he was only thirteen years old, but he joined a Confederate infantry company called the Lone Star Grays. He was with them over a year. His education was limited to what he acquired in pursuing his trade of printer. He married his wife at Austin in 1869. In 1870 he was elected Secretary of the Texas Senate, and the following year was appointed a deputy United States Internal Revenue Collector. He held this office until he came to Chicago in 1873, when he resumed his trade as a compositor on the Times. In 1876 he joined the Socialists. During the labor troubles of the following year he was arrested by the chief of police for a speech he had made to twenty thousand laboring men at the Market square, but was released the same night.



A. R. PARSONS.

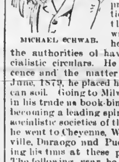
Samuel Fielden was born in Todmorden, Lancashire, England, February 25, 1847. He worked in a cotton mill in various capacities from the time he was eight years old till he reached his majority. When he was eighteen years old he went to Westlyn and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, becoming a Sunday-school superintendent and afterward a local preacher. He came to the United States in 1866. After working East he went to Olmstead Falls, near Cleveland, O., removing to Summit, Cook County, in 1869, where he worked upon the farm of "Long" John Wentworth. He then went South, and took up his residence in Chicago in 1871. Since that time he has been doing stone work and teaming. In the meantime, joining the Liberal League, he was sent as a delegate to the National Convention of this body in Milwaukee. He joined the American Group of the International in 1884, and has been, since then, one of its leading lights.

SAMUEL FIELDEN.

Louis Lingg, the youngest of the doomed Anarchists, is only twenty-one years old, having been born in Baden, Germany, in 1864. He secured a common school education in Germany. After leaving his native country he went to Switzerland, where he remained several years, arriving in America in August, 1885. He is a carpenter by trade and unmarried. There has been a very strong suspicion extant that he was compelled to leave his native land on account of the extreme interest the authorities were taking in his welfare. Some even deny that he is sailing under his true name.

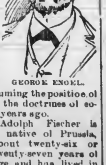
LOUIS LINGG.

Michael Schwab was born in Kittringsn on-the-Main, Bavaria, August 9, 1853. He attended a public school five years and the Latin school four years. He was apprenticed to a book-binder, and after serving his apprenticeship he worked at his trade in several Austrian and Swiss cities. He embraced socialism at Wurzeberg, in 1873. His progress in this direction was so brilliant that a year afterward, in Engelstadt, he was suspected by the authorities of having distributed socialistic circulars. He proved his innocence and the matter was dropped. In June, 1879, he placed his feet upon American soil. Going to Milwaukee, he engaged in his trade as book-binder and Socialist, becoming a leading spirit in the prominent socialistic societies of that place. In 1881 he went to Cheyenne, W. T., Denver, Leadville, Durango and Pueblo, Col., employing his time at these places in odd jobs. The following year he came to Chicago. In the fall of 1882 he became the reporter and translator for the Arbeiter-Zeitung. A promotion to the position of co-editor soon followed. Justus Schwab, the rampant New York Socialist, is his brother.



MICHAEL SCHWAB.

George C. Engel was born in Cassel, Hesse, Germany, in 1839. Early in January, 1872, he came to America, and afterwards to Chicago where he has since lived, working as a painter. That year he was a candidate for the position of West town collector, on the Socialistic ticket. In the spring of 1880 he took charge of the business management of the Arbeiter-Zeitung, shortly afterward assuming the position of editor. He embraced the doctrines of socialism about twenty years ago.



GEORGE ENGEL.

Adolph Fischer is a native of Prussia, about twenty-six or twenty-seven years of age, and has lived in this country for the last thirteen years. The year 1870 brought him to Chicago once more.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Miscellaneous Items.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market for Burley tobaccos has been mainly soft and yielding except that immediately after two or three distinct declines though there were short intervals of firmness and even of slight recovery. The later action was sort of a mild fluctuation above and below a scale of prices [illegible] lower for medium leaf, [illegible] lower for low grades, and [illegible] lower for good and fine grades than at the beginning of the month. In good and fine grades there are only two specialties exempt from this decline, wrappery leaf, which retains fully the high premium it has held over everything else, and bright cutters, which remain in the neglect and depression in which they have been sunk all the year. Dark and heavy styles have been active and steady throughout the week, with no material change one way or the other. Low grades are said to be a trifle fuller and medium somewhat steadier than heretofore during the current month. We quote 1886 tobaccos as follows for full weight packages:

	Dark and Heavy	Burley

Sister Eulalie, the venerable Superioress at the Academy of the Immaculate Conception, Newport, was burned to death by her bed catching fire.

Geo. Robinson, mine foreman at Earlington, was instantly killed the other day by falling slate crushing his skull.

The Princeton Banner office was burned a few nights ago. Nothing was saved except a law library.

Lenore, Nelson County, now has a post-office. Jos. E. Magruder is postmaster.

The "belled buzzard" was seen a few days ago by Felix Sipes, one mile below Big Spring. He was near enough to see the bell plainly. He says it is a round bell, and has the tone of a sheep-bell. Four years ago John Meadors saw the buzzard about two miles below where Mr. Sipes saw it.

The other night six young men of Covington, ranging in age from fifteen to twenty-three years, started out in a small skiff for a ride upon the Ohio river. They had not been out long when the steamboat C. W. Batchelor came along, throwing up heavy waves. The young men's skiff was caught in the swell of the boat, and as none of them knew how to handle a skiff, it was soon upset. Before they knew the danger they were struggling in the water. None of them could swim, but they all caught hold of the sinking boat. Their frantic efforts to hold on kept the submerged skiff turning over and over in the water. Each time the skiff was turned over they would all be compelled to let go, and as it would right up again they attempted to renew their hold. This turning operation was kept up, and one by one the drowning boys failed to catch as the skiff would right up until only two were left. These held on firmly and steadily and floated with the boat down the river, until their cries attracted attention, and they were rescued. After picking up the two half-drowned boys the rescuing party looked around for the others until thoroughly satisfied that further search for them alive was useless. They then pulled to the shore with the two they had saved, where it was learned that they were Bud Marsh and Ed Guy, and that those who had been drowned were Frank and Walter Guy, Geo. Glover and Harry Wilson.

The tailor workmen of Covington have formed an association. They have a membership of nearly forty.

An elopement has caused a thrill among the good society people of Jeffersontown, a suburb of Louisville. The maid was Miss Lucy Leatherman, the pretty young daughter of the wealthiest farmer of the vicinity, and the bold Lochinvar was W. W. Ellingsworth, a young neighbor. Miss Leatherman loved Ellingsworth, but her father found another suitor, who came the other Sunday to take her to church, but a tremendous thunder storm caused the trip to be postponed, and while the favorite was discussing crops with the old man Ellingsworth drove up in his buggy to pay a visit. The situation was quickly appreciated, and it did not require much persuasion to induce Miss Lucy to take a seat in his buggy without a pound of baggage. They drove off in the storm and went to Middletown, where they soon procured a license and were married, while the old man and his favorite had got no further along in the crop discussion than early cabbages.

Civil war is reported as about to break out in open hostilities in Harlan County. A gentleman who arrived at Louisville on the 24th from Mount Pleasant says that Fulton French, a well-known mountain merchant, is recruiting a company to go over and attack Joseph Eversole, a competitor at Hazard, Perry County. French had already enrolled seventy men, and was paying $3 and $2.50 per day for recruits. The men are armed with Winchester rifles, thoroughly equipped, and are drilling every day. Meanwhile all the roads are picketed to prevent an attack by Eversole, who is also said to have a large force under arms. The pickets allow no one to pass without permits, not even messengers on errands of life or death, and the whole county is virtually under military law. The force is made up of murderers, desperadoes and a lot of fellows out on bond, and they have intimidated the county authorities and have full control. A conflict is said to be imminent at any moment, and the quiet people are in a state of terror at the prospect. United States Marshal Gross has just returned from that vicinity, having in charge Rad Sewell, a notorious desperado and moonshiner. Captain Gross says the mountain region is in a state of civil anarchy, but Judge Boyd, who has just opened court at Pineville, has ordered a number of arrests, and has expressed a determination to put down the disorder if possible.

Joseph Rindere was accidentally killed at the Blick & Phillips Coal Elevator near Milldale, Kenton County, the other night, by a car falling on him from the elevator. His son Peter was probably fatally injured at the same time.

Lieutenant W. O. Barley, Company F, Louisville Legion, has been ordered under arrest and denied admission to the armory for thirty days for riding out the line during the late encampment at Crab Orchard, when he should have walked with the boys.

Thos. M. DeHart is the new postmaster at Ordinary.

A post-office has been established at Omer, Morgan County, and John W. McGuire commissioned postmaster.

Thirty-eight thousand dollars of the new Covington and Newport Bridge bonds have been sold to the Northern Bank at a premium of $1,215 and interest.

The recent decision of a Kentucky court that a man's sweetheart must return his presents if she doesn't marry him, will perhaps put a check on those insatiate young females who are ready to impoverish every generous, unsophisticated lover who happens to fall into their net.

General H. P. Ransom committed suicide at Lexington.

Hon. Rhea [illegible] of Georgetown is a base-ball enthusiast and devotes a column and a half of the Times each week to base ball news.

At Owenton Sunday while Willie Thompson and Ollie Carlton were examining a pistol it was discharged and Thompson was fatally killed.

Hon. Clifton R. Breckinridge, son of the late John C. Breckinridge, has been unanimously renominated for Congress in the second Arkansas district.

In this issue appears an Article which invites a discussion of the constitutionality of the recent act of the legislature providing for three commissioners for this county.

The office of the Princeton Banner was destroyed by fire Wednesday night of last week. Captain Allen, the editor, saved only his law library. Printing office fully covered by insurance.

Out of the 407 men who compose Congress, 283 are members of churches. There are 72 Methodist, 63 Baptist, 41 Episcopalians, 47 Presbyterians, 36 Catholics, 15 Unitarians, 10 Christians and 2 Quakers.

It will be seen by a letter elsewhere in this issue, that Hon. John G. Carlisle will deliver a speech in the Court-house in Burlington on Monday, October 4th. It is to be hoped that he will be favored with a large audience.

The very latest thing out in Presidential tickets for 1888 is Cleveland and Voorhees, and the very first kick comes from an indignant Hoosier who wants the Tall Sycamore to stand at the head or nowhere.—Courier-Journal.

The Illinois Democratic State Convention nominated George C. Anderson for State Treasurer. The platform of principles adopted at the Chicago National Canvention was reaffirmed and the administration of President Cleveland indorsed.

The Democratic State Central Committee has decided that neither of the rival candidates for Congress in the Indianapolis district was nominated by a majority of the delegates from the counties, and a new convention has been called to meet on the 4th of this month.

All the county officers elected at the recent election qualify the first Monday in September, with the exception of the Sheriff, who does not take the oath of office until January. The magistrates do not qualify until June.—Ex.

In this neck o' woods it is considered necessary to qualify before that time, in order to hold a county office.

An exchange says a strange disease is prevailing among the sheep of Jackson county, Indiana. As soon as attacked the sheep are thrown into hard spasms, and death often follows in less than 30 minutes. The disease seems to baffle the skill of all. Some think it results from a kind of fly that stings the sheep in the nose.

Gov. Gray, of Indiana, has issued a proclamation in which he refers to the lynching of Holly Epps at Vincennes, Mart Thomas and John Archer at Shoals, William Munn at Huron, and William Watkins at Aurora, and declares that such conduct on the part of citizens of his State is a crime against her laws, and tends to bring the good name of the State into disrepute. He, therefore offers a reward of $1,000 for the apprehension and conviction to not less than imprisonment in the penitentiary of any person engaged in either of the lynchings referred to, or any that may hereafter take place.

At the recent session of the Teachers' Institute for this county a resolution was adopted asking the County Superintendent of Common Schools to adopt a series of text books to be used in the schools of this county. This move is in the proper direction, and should meet with the hearty approval of the patrons. The lack of a uniformity of text books in the schools of this county has been very annoying to both teachers and parents, and often have teachers incurred the displeasure of patrons in attempting to introduce a uniform set of books in order that a school might be properly organized into classes. When the books are adopted they can not be changed for five years, which protects the patrons against any attempt to have different books imposed upon them.

It will now be but a few days before the school in Morgan Academy [illegible]

That Boone county needs a good school to which [illegible] is adapted to a school of that character while the surroundings of the school and pupils will make such as are calculated to interest with the advancement of those who [illegible] any application whatever.

Taking into consideration every [illegible] there is not a county in the State the county seat of which presents the advantages in favor of a good school that Burlington does. It is a quiet healthy town and not disturbed with the immoralities with which pupils sent from home to attend school invariable come in contact. This latter advantage is one upon which parents cannot place an estimate in dollars and cents, and should have much weight with them in determining to what town they will send their children to be educated.

By having a school at Burlington, the children of those in the county who patronize it, will, in a manner, be under the care of the fathers and mothers, who, cooperating with the teachers, can materially assist in the advancement of the children, and the correction of any irregularities which might befall them.

Those of this county who have children to educate will find it to their advantage in the matter of dollars and cents to encourage a school in the Morgan Academy. They can have their children at home on Saturdays and Sundays which will be a great satisfaction besides a great reduction in the matter of board bills.

We believe that the young men who are to have charge of the school this year will exert themselves to give their patrons value received, and we bespeak for them a liberal patronage, knowing that the people of Boone desire a higher order of education than can be obtained at the public schools, and being abundantly able to give their children a liberal schooling.

The Superintendent of Public Instruction for Kentucky announces that the common school fund this year will be large enough to give $1 65 for the education of each child of requisite age in the State. In most districts no additional money will be raised for the benefit of schools. Only $1 65 for a year's education! It is less than the price of a glass of beer once a week; not as much as the average voter is beginning to get for going to the polls; too little to buy circus tickets for a family; it is such a sum that every man in the State might afford to throw away once in a year without feeling any loss. One dollar and sixty-five cents is a paltry sum in any connection, and there's almost nothing that can be bought with it that would not be deemed insignificant. Education that costs only $1 65 a year is not worth enough to be respected. It suggests lazy, unkept tobacco-chewing teachers, in log houses with broken window panes, from which poor children themselves for the want of clothing to keep out the cold and richer children stay away from pride. Six years are as many as one attends a common school, and at $1 65 a year Kentucky expects a young man to be educated on $9 90! It wouldn't buy a decent suit of clothes, or a reliable six-shooter, or take a man on a single trip across the State. It is no wonder that Kentucky is full of people who seem not to appreciate education. They wouldn't appreciate many other things that cost only $1 65. This $1 65 education is something for Kentuckians to blush at; it makes other people mock at us. Yet the taxpayers of Kentucky say that their burdens are as heavy as they can bear. It may be that they are right. And when we point to other States with bigger school funds and better common schools, the people respond that the taxpayers alone in those States did not build up those great educational systems. From Connecticut to California, from Michigan to Texas, the liberality of the Federal government enabled the people to offer their youths something better than $1 65 education. If Kentucky can not afford to do better than this without help it is false pride that will prevent her from accepting such help from the outside as has advanced other States.—Louisville Commercial.

An ex-soldier named Richardson, of Milton, Trimble co., this State, has been granted a pension of $72 a month, and arrearages allowed him to the amount of $11,764. The pensioner is totally blind, the result of a disease contracted in the Andersonville prison.

Is the Act Creating Commissioners Constitutional?

[illegible]

Art. 4, Sect. [illegible], establishes the court of claims, who may sit as the court and what it [illegible]. That [illegible]

Art. 4, Sect. [illegible], provides for the [illegible] of [illegible] court. That is easily understood.

Art. 4, Sect. 36, shows that the jurisdiction of the court is [illegible] to the General Assembly which [illegible] for the General Assembly can take away from the courts jurisdiction [illegible] in fact upon all the points upon which the court has present jurisdiction and in [illegible] of points or subjects were given to the court, the effect would be to abolish a court which the Constitution has established. In justice to all concerned let us send section 37 as in comport with the present law. Section 37: "The General Assembly may provide by law that three commissioners, with the ex-officio members in Boone county, shall sit to adjudicate all claims, lay the county levy and make appropriations."

The above seems to be a substitute for the Constitution, which power of substituting, revising, amending, &c., was never given to the General Assembly; for Article 12 provides the mode of revising the Constitution.

CONCLUSIONS:

1st. When an expressed way, person or thing is mentioned, any other person, way or thing is excluded.

2d. When the General Assembly, in altering the jurisdiction of a court, or, in the formation of inferior courts in effect, alters, substitutes or amends the Constitution, the act is void.

Dr. Hunt, of Millersburg has cut his tobacco crop, which matured in two months and seventeen days after setting out. Some of the leaves measured three feet.

The yield of wheat and other small grains in Carroll county is about ten per cent. above the average crop. Wheat is selling at from 60 to 65c per bushel. The fruit yield is excellent.

Two girls of a well-to-do Grayson county farmer gave up dime novels, and instead cultivated three acres of tobacco, which the Litchfield Sunbeam says is as fine as can be seen anywhere.

Three hundred and thirteen bushels of rye were threshed from nine acres of tobacco land in Bourbon county. It was grazed from the time the rye came up until it was nearly headed out.

Martin Cooney, who resides on Lawrence Creek, raised 6,500 pounds of tobacco last year on three acres of land. He sold it Saturday for $7 per hundred from the ground up.—Maysville Bulletin.

Jeff Davis says that the Southern Democracy should be congratulated upon having elevated their slaves up to a grade of civilization so high that the Republicans thought them fit to citizenship which serves to show that Jeff can still strike a pretty hard blow in debate.—Louisville Times.

The Corinth Enterprise is responsible for the following: "A gobbler belonging to Silas Henry, colored, has been setting for two weeks on two potatoes in a patch of W. H. Rulin. They took him away and tied him for a few days, but after releasing him he returned to the potatoes."

Cynthiana is called the Maiden City. The way it got the name is this: It was founded in 1793, on the land of Robert Harrison, who had two daughters, Cynthia and Anna. They both lived to be old maids and the town was named for them.—Hence the derivation of the name—Maiden City.

In Shelbyville a man cannot exercise the right of suffrage until he has paid his town taxes. Recently an exciting election was held in that place as to whether there should be license or no license and $2,365.75 was paid up in back taxes by the leaders of the two factions.

Marshal Gross has instructed Deputy Marshals to use dynamite bombs in hunting down Kentucky moonshiners since the attempted assassination of Deputy Rogers. Andy Johnson, a notorious moonshine murderer, hearing of the new weapon, surrendered a few days ago, but was released on heavy bond.

A Pulaski county farmer, Wm. Clark, gives his experience with fertilizer on wheat in the Somerset Republican, in which he got eight bushels on the unfertilized and nearly twenty on the fertilized portion of the same field, besides a better catch of clover and an immense straw stack. He thinks it will pay to fertilize wheat in the mountain counties.

Several of the young men of Versailles, have organized a society for the exploration of the many caves in Woodford county. They explored the cavern on the farm of Sam'l. Hampton several days ago to the distance of three-quarters of a mile. They reported several chambers about eight feet square, and high enough for one to stand upright in. A number of initials were found cut in the walls of these chambers, some of them with very old dates attached. These young men say they intend, at any expense, to explore every cave in Woodford county having a large enough mouth for them to crawl into.

Tuesday night about 9 o'clock, Joe Read, a colored man who resides in the west end of town, was taken from his home and carried some distance to a vacant lot by, he claims, four men, and severely thrashed with a lash. After Read was released he came up town and made the matter known, but Marshal Stone's visit to the scene did not give any clew to the guilty parties. Read has been in the habit of unmercifully beating his wife, whom it is said, he also required to spend her wages in furnishing food for her family, while he expended his money for drink. Read's wife says she does not know the men, but expressed thanks that her husband had been whipped, and hoped the dose would be repeated if he did not cease to beat her. Read did not know whether the men were white or black, but it is reasonable to supposed they were black since he can get no sympathy from that race. Read has been before the police court often and has no fear of the law.—Eminence Constitutionalist.

School begins in Morgan Academy Monday, September 6th, with advantages that have never been offered before. The house will be ready to receive all scholars that may come when school opens, and every thing will be taught that is taught in any of the colleges. Board for young men and ladies reasonably cheap with the best families of the town, and with a liberal patronage of the public of Boone, the school will be a permanent success.

Last week Henry McGlasson, living near Pt. Pleasant Grave, had William Peno and Ben Wagner arrested for taking coal off of his bar. The warrant being put in Constable Helm's hands, he had the boys before his Honor, Esquire Goodridge, in short order. Upon investigating the case the Squire held the accused for a further investigation by the next grand jury, and in default of $50 bail each, they were sent to the county cooler, and on Thursday Peno was released on bail.

Dr. Gill Rice, of the McVille neighborhood, and who has been very low with consumption for many months, died last Saturday night. The funeral was preached by Rev. J. A. Kirtley at Bellevue Baptist church Monday at 10 a. m., after which the remains were taken to Rising Sun and placed in the vault to await final interment. The deceased was a native of this county, and had been a very successful business man. He leaves a wife and three children besides several brothers to mourn his demise.

The morning of the day on which Grafton trotted at Latonia last week, it was noticed that he did not eat his food, which was conclusive evidence that he was not in perfect condition, but, yielding to the wishes of his admirers, his owners consented for him to enter the race, and, although he won in three straight heats, his condition was made much worse, and for a day or two he was a very sick horse. Considering his condition we regard the time he made as extraordinary. It may be some time before Grafton is on his feet aright again.

The young ladies of the school will be under her direct supervision and control, and she will spare no pains to make them refined and cultured.

There is a hitch in the distribution to the creditors of the Lawrenceburg National Bank. The U. S. Court has decided that the distribution to the creditors must begin from the date of the closing of the bank, and not from the date of the appointment of the receiver. The Third National Bank, of Cincinnati, which had, with other creditors, received a fifty cent distribution, based on the theory that there could be no additional creditors between the close and the appointment of a receiver, has filed a motion for an appeal, and under the advice of the controller of the currency the distribution will await the court's decision on the appeal. In the meantime, what the receiver holds is to await the verdict.

Train No. 1, [illegible] ran off the track [illegible] Grant county, [illegible] Monday, and fortunately very few [illegible] were injured, [illegible] the engine, [illegible] of the passengers would have been killed and injured. The fireman, Whitley, [illegible] was badly scalded and otherwise injured, from the effects of which he will probably die. The wreck was the result of the spreading of the track. Mrs. Annie Williams, daughter of Bullittsville, boarded the ill-fated train at Latonia that morning to go to Lexington. The passengers were badly shook up.

He will be Here.

NEWPORT, KY., Aug. 30, 1886.

J. C. Finnell and W. L. Riddell, Esqs.:

Gentlemen—Owing to my absence from home, your favor of the 23d inst. was not received until this afternoon. I had intended to leave for Kansas last week, but was detained by an important case at Alexandria. If your letter had been received earlier, I would have arranged matters so as to come down to Burlington on next Monday, but, as there is scarcely time now to give notice, it is better, I think, to postpone my visit until the first Monday in October. Please let our friends know that I will speak at Burlington on Monday, October 4th, at one o'clock p. m.

Yours Truly,
J. G. CARLISLE.

Several Good Templars of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, visited Fidelity Lodge at this place, last Friday night. Upon their arrival in town the visitors were escorted to the Palmer House, where a good supper was served, after which a very interesting lodge meeting was enjoyed. The lodge was closed about ten o'clock, and then refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake, were served at Mr. Dempsey's. The programme for the evening's amusement concluded by a hop in Morgan Academy Hall, which was not brought to a conclusion until a late hour. The young ladies and gentlemen who planned the programme for the entertainment of the guests, left nothing undone that would render their visit a source of pleasure. The following were here from Lawrenceburg: Misses Derrah, Palmer, Platt, Cole, Barrett and Messrs. Tilley McConnell, Stewart, Smasher, Lowe and Shepherd.

The following is from the Burlington items in the Commonwealth of the 24th ult.:

"This is what the Boone county Recorder says about the picnic: 'The receipts and expenses of the temperance picnic Saturday failed to balance.' The latter were the larger. Just so, Messrs Editors, we did come out behind, but 'we did not fail to vote on the second day of August, 1886,' for temperance as you all did."

If "we" did vote for temperance on the second day of August, 1886, it is about the first act of "we's" life that is worthy of note; and don't "we" think that the money which "we" wants somebody else to invest in street lamps for Burlington would better be invested in a medal for "we?" who is not of such great importance but that without the privilege of the columns of a paper through which to proclaim it, the public would never have been informed of so important a fact to no body but "we," that "'we' voted for temperance on the second day of August, 1886." In the same issue "we" displays "we's" decayed idea of propriety by an unnecessary and very awkward criticism of an amateur dramatic troupe.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

MAKING WALL-PAPER.

The Ingenious Machinery Used in Its Manufacture.

Modern Conditions of the Trade—The Changes of Fashion—Hand Printing—The New Material Employed for Wall Decoration.

The householder of the present day certainly has reason to be thankful that the wall-papers with which his rooms may be decorated can not be as easily discarded as a bonnet or a cloak, for if such were the case, it is probable that if his purse were deep enough, he would have to pay for new coverings for the walls of his house every year. Each year the manufacturers of wall-papers issue new books containing samples of the designs in stock, and each year the designs, coloring, and styles of these goods undergo changes more or less marked, and a paper which last year was eagerly sought for may this year meet with no sale whatever, should there be any stock left over. Not only do the styles change, but the colors also; one year the demand will be the greatest for pronounced positive colors, and the next year soft, subdued tints and shades, almost indistinguishable, will be most in demand. Then, again, the manufacturer of wall-papers has to provide different styles and colors to suit the demands of the trade in different parts of the country. In New York and the Eastern States the demand may be greatest for dark browns or greens or other colors of a deep tone, while at the West these goods will find no sale whatever, and the trade there will run altogether in colors of a light tint or vice versa. So with patterns also.

The manufacturers of wall-paper now calculate on a change of fashion every year, and only manufacture enough stock to last through one season. "If," said one of the principal manufacturers in this city a few days ago, "the fancy of the public should be so much taken by any special design that the demand for paper of that pattern should continue more than one season we could very easily turn off as much more stock as may be wanted. We keep the designs from which these goods are printed from year to year. They are all labeled and stored away where they can be produced at any time. It is not often, however, that we use the same patterns for two successive years, except it may be for the cheaper grades of goods. We manufacture enough of each style to supply the trade for the year, and if we have any left over at the close of the season, which rarely happens, these goods are sold at a discount to jobbers, or are disposed of at auction sales. It is a singular thing that goods which will meet with a ready sale right along one year will be refused by dealers as soon as they see a new book of designs. We print each design in from four to six or eight different colors, or shades of the same color. Of course, it is impossible for us to tell whether or not the designs and colors of the papers will meet with a ready sale, but it is very seldom that we fail to find somewhere a market for the stock. The improvements made in the machinery for the manufacture of the wall-paper enables us to accomplish a much greater amount of work, and also to produce a much more varied assortment of goods than we could in former years."

A tour of inspection through one of the largest manufactories in this city was made a few days since by a reporter. The paper on which the designs are printed is manufactured especially for this purpose, and it is of varying weight. It is received in large heavy rolls, resembling the rolls of paper used in newspaper offices. This paper is first passed through the "grounding" machine, where the ground color, be it light or dark, is applied to the surface of the paper by rollers, and then is rubbed in and thoroughly distributed by means of a set of brushes, some of which move from side to side, while others are stationary. Some of the improved machines can apply this ground color to two rolls at the same time. If it is desired that the paper shall have the silvered appearance seen in some papers a "mica" coat, as it is called, is applied. This coloring matter is pulverized isinglass mixed with white lead. The colors of this mixture can not well be shaded, and therefore in such cases the differences in shade are made by using paper of different colors. After the ground color has been applied the roll of paper is placed on a framework and is slowly unrolled, and then carried on an endless band over a large drum, resembling the cylinder of a printing-press. The machine on which the paper is printed, in fact, resembles very closely a cylinder printing press, except that the process of printing is reversed; the paper passes over the drum or cylinder, and the designs are printed by the rolls, which are placed on the lower part of the framework and revolve in the same direction as the cylinder. Each roller is stamped with a different part of the figure forming the general design to be produced, and each of these portions of the design is printed in distinct color.

The colors are applied to the printing blocks or rolls by an endless band of muslin passing through a tank filled with the color for that particular block. As the band covered with the color passes from the tank it travels over or beneath a piece of metal having a toothed edge, technically known as a "doctor," and all superfluous paint is removed, running back into the tank. The printing rolls are so adjusted that each portion of the design is closely joined together, producing a harmonious effect. These printing machines print from two to twelve colors at the same time. The colors are prepared by a special process, so that they do not "run" or blend. The heavier shades are applied last, as a general thing, though the arrangement of the colors and the printing blocks depends in great measure upon the design which is to be produced.

After passing over the cylinder the printed paper is carried to the dryer on endless chains. This dryer extends the entire length of the factory, and by an ingenious arrangement, [illegible] the paper passes [illegible] of the [illegible]. At the [illegible] of about eighty feet [illegible] called "carriers." These sticks are moved along by little projections in the endless chain, the paper hanging in loose loops or folds between the "carriers." The paper is carried along for a distance of two or three hundred feet over coils of steam pipe, and thus is quickly dried. After hanging for a length of time varying from one to twenty-four hours, the paper is taken from the carriers and laid in a dry room, where it remains until the drying process is thoroughly complete. It is then taken to another room where, by ingenious machinery, it is rolled in lengths of marketable size. If it is desired to apply a coat of bronze powder to make a figure, the figure which is to be thus treated is stamped on the paper as it passes through the printing machine with a heavy coat of varnish. Then, after passing once over the coil of steam pipe in order that the other colors may be dried, the paper is sent through a long air tight box in which this bronze "shot" is sifted over the surface from a perforated tray, and the paper then passes around the end of the traveller and back over the hot air or steam pipes.

The finest and most elaborate designs, however, are printed by hand. Each color must be stamped separately, and any one can at once distinguish paper that is printed by hand from that printed by machine. In the former at one of the margins will be found, at distances of about eighteen inches, fine lines or dots containing the colors forming the design. These are the marks guiding the men in their work of stamping the pattern. The block or die for each separate portion of the pattern which is to be printed in a certain color is about eighteen inches in length. The workman presses the die upon a pad covered with the color, and then places it upon the paper as it lies on the table in front of him, taking care that the guide at the edge of the die joins the mark left on the margin of the paper. Placing a swivel over the block, he presses a lever with his foot, thus stamping the form of the die on the paper. A boy attendant spreads the paper on a rack, where it is permitted to dry, and it is then taken to another machine, where the same process is gone through in printing another portion of the design in another color, and this process is repeated in some instances a dozen or more times, until the entire design in all its more or less harmonious blending of colors is produced. With hand work the process of applying a velvet coat to any figure is much different from that used in producing a "bronze" effect in papers painted by machine. The figure which is to be thus produced in velvet is stamped with a heavy glue; the paper is then passed through a long trough having the bottom and sides of stout canvas. In this trough the floss or material which is used to produce the velvet effect is placed. A boy scatters this material over the surface of the paper, and then, taking a couple of sticks in his hand, he beats a tattoo on the pliable bottom of the trough, thoroughly distributing the floss over the figure. In fact, the boys raise such a dust that it is almost impossible to breathe.

Many of the finer qualities of paper are now made with fine lines pressed in the paper. This is done by passing between two rollers, one of which is brass, on which is engraved the design to be stamped on the paper, the other roller being of wood covered with paper, which by constant pressure has become almost as hard as metal. Between these rolls the paper is subjected to a tremendous pressure, and it is impossible to efface the lines thus created. These brass rollers, as well as all of the wooden dies used in stamping the designs by hand, and also the cylinder dies used in the machines, are engraved on the manufacturer's premises. Many of these dies, especially for work where it is required to produce fine lines, are made by setting pieces of brass into blocks of wood. These pieces of brass are moulded or bent into all sorts of curves and figures, and vary in thickness from an eighth of an inch to a line which is scarcely visible to the eye. On many of these hand-dies, which are not more than two inches long by eighteen inches wide, as many as one hundred to two hundred pieces of brass are thus inlaid.

Within the last few years the demand for something more substantial and "dressy" than the ordinary wall-paper has sprung up. To meet the demand, heavy embossed paper has sprung up. This new wall-covering is made of wood fiber, pressed on a background of linen which has been subjected to a special treatment of oxidized oil. By the use of this material the walls and ceiling of a room can be finished in a manner giving the appearance of handsome wood carvings or moldings in stone or metal. There is a steadily increasing demand for this class of goods, not only for use in covering the walls of dwelling-houses and public buildings, but also for furnishing the cabins of steamships, yachts, and for decorating railroad cars. It is light and water-proof, and can be washed and cleansed as readily as wood or marble. The wood pulp is applied while in a plastic state, and the design which is to be stamped on the paper is engraved on a die, which is pressed down upon the bed of pulp as it is spread upon the linen covering. The molded material hardens quickly, but does not become brittle; in fact, it is so pliable that this new wall-covering is rolled up the same as wall-paper, though, of course, not so compactly.

For the interior decoration of houses, especially halls, drawing-rooms and dining-rooms, this new material is gaining in popularity very rapidly. It is a poor conductor of heat, and thus the moisture in the room does not gather upon it. It has a smoother, warmer look than wood or marble carving, and has no glare to break up and reflect the light like tiling, nor does it become warped by heat. The fact that this material is made in continuous rolls renders it especially adaptable for dado work or friezes. A dado formed of this material can be carried all around a room, into any angle, corner or bay-window, without a break. It harmonizes with wall-paper much better than carved wood or stone, and does not chip or break when struck by any piece of furniture.

The variety of designs in which the new wall covering is made is as great almost as with ordinary wall-paper, but the colorings used are by no means as varied. After it has been hung upon the walls, however, it can be painted or gilded so as to resemble burnished metal, or can be colored and grained to imitate any kind of wood, leather, bronze, tapestry, ceramic or other style of decoration. Among the many styles in which this material is produced, the one which is the most popular at this time is the Japanese, but Egyptian, Greek, Byzantine, Moresque, Mediæval, Renaissance and many other patterns are produced.—*N. A SILENT SENATE.

That Body Has Nothing to Say About a Bit of Explanation Sent by Attorney-General Garland to the Senate Regarding the Hill Suspension Case.

The person who unearthed the letter Attorney-General Garland sent to the President of the Senate in reply to a resolution of the high legislative body asking for official papers and correspondence concerning the administration and conduct of the office of Marshal for the Eastern District of North Carolina from the first of January to July 20, 1886, is deserving of thanks for exposing to the public the hypocrisy of the Senate. It appears from the letter Mr. Garland sent to President pro tem Sherman that J. B. Hill, a Republican, who held the office of Marshal, left his home in Raleigh in 1884 while he was Marshal, and went to the Republican convention of the First Congressional district in which he did not live and by an active canvass succeeded in being elected a delegate to the convention at Chicago which nominated Blaine, and that he attended such convention and participated in its proceedings. Soon after President Cleveland entered upon the discharge of his duties, the people of the Eastern district of North Carolina asked for a change in the office and gave him facts relating to Hill's partisanship. It is not necessary to say that Hill's official head rolled in the saw dust, or that a Democrat was appointed in his place. The Senate did not want Hill ousted for he was too handy in carrying caucuses and conventions in that State, and so the committee having the appointment of his successor under advisement applied to Attorney-General Garland for letters and papers on file in his office, thinking it could make a case against the Administration. The note the Attorney-General sent the committee must have disturbed the Republican members, for they said never a word, although they had been fishing for a suspension over which to raise a howl. But the case of Hill would not do by any means. It was too clear, and the President expressly stated that the suspension was made for the sole reason that Hill left his home and went to another district where he manipulated a Republican convention so skillfully that he was sent to the Chicago National convention. It is clear that if Hill had remained in office much longer he would have had the Republican party of North Carolina in his vest pocket to dispose of as he pleased. But is it not surprising that the Senate did not make public the information it received in regard to Mr. Hill and his conduct as an official? The Republican party had Hills everywhere, men without the slightest regard for the wishes or preferences of the party, fellows who throttled free speech and filled ballot boxes at caucuses, elected such delegates as they pleased, and nominated anybody they fixed upon for the offices to be filled. They were here in Buffalo and are here now. Do the honest voters think that it was not high time for a change?—Buffalo Times.

THE JINGO CHIEFTAIN.

Why He Called Attention to the "Misdirected Energy" of the Department of State.

Brother Blaine is experiencing the difficulty of directing his boom from a point outside of politics. He can not always get his orders around in time. If there is any one thing in which the organs were justified in supposing that Brother Blaine's position was fixed it was in the matter of hostility to all foreign Powers whatsoever. He had himself given the keynote in a fierce speech on the fishery dispute, which relates to very obscure points in international law, and they supposed that they were quite safe in abusing the Administration for its caution in getting up a fight with Mexico.

But Brother Blaine, from his point of observation at Bar Harbor, quickly perceived the danger of this position. If Cleveland and Bayard were encouraged or allowed to go to war, what would become of Blaine's own jingo policy and the one only jingo party of which he is the chief? This thing must be stopped, and accordingly, there was a sudden change of front. Mr. Hitt, a Blaine man from Illinois, who had voted for the resolutions of instruction in the Foreign Committee, objected to their consideration in the House, declaring that Mexico was being unreasonably pushed, and the principal Blaine organ, the New York Tribune, opened an attack on the "misdirected energy" of the Department of State, whose position in the Cutting case is said to be all wrong.

It is true that small politicians and party organs are accustomed to sudden changes. When the State Department appeared slow, it was the organs' duty to abuse it; when it showed itself active, it was equally to be abused. But in the suddenness of the change regarding the Mexican affair it is impossible to doubt the guiding hand of the celebrated jingo chieftain. Among all his experimental issues he has always clung to the American Eagle, and that anybody else should assume the championship of that proud bird he regards as an infringement on his copyright. The minor Blaine organs have been a little slow in taking the cue, but we may expect them to tumble into line very soon. A disturbance with Mexico in advance of 1888 would leave Brother Blaine and his jingo party to hopeless desuetude.—Philadelphia Times.

A PLAIN ISSUE.

A New Snub with the Senate Alone to Show Once Why no Honest Colored Democrat Should Be Slighted by the Republicans.

When President Cleveland came into office Frederick Douglass, who is, next to Senator Bruce, perhaps the best representative that the colored race has put to the front, was occupying the fat place of recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia. He had originally been appointed by Mr. Hayes, for the well understood purpose of catering to the colored vote, to the position of United States Marshal of the District, a place which, under the well established Washington procedure, makes the incumbent the usher at the White House receptions. When Mr. Arthur came to the Presidency he was quite indisposed to do any injustice to Mr. Douglass, but was equally indisposed to permit a colored man to occupy that high social position. So he appointed him to the much more lucrative position of recorder of deeds, and put in Morton McMichael, of Philadelphia, as marshal. So it was as recorder of deeds that President Cleveland found him.

One of the first acts of the new President was to teach Mr. Douglass that he had no social scruples against him. He was personally invited to White House receptions even in cases where invitations were very rare. He was treated not only like a man, but like a gentleman. And when it came time for him to leave office he left it with so kindly an opinion of the Democratic President that his published card stands on record as one of the best of the tributes paid to the personal manliness of that officer. The card is a vigorous Republican document, but it is at the same time a glowing compliment to the worth of President Cleveland.

In the place of Mr. Douglass as recorder of deeds the President appointed another colored man—W. C. Mathews, of Albany. The Republicans of the Senate, who believe that no colored man should hold office unless he votes the Republican ticket, rejected the appointment. There was no question of the appointee's worth. The rejection was a purely partisan performance.

And now, after Congress has adjourned, the President reappoints the rejected nominee, Mathews. It is a sharp issue with the Senate. If there has been a similar case in the history of our country it has escaped us. Yet the President is a thoroughly sound lawyer and not likely to take a step of this kind without a full consideration of all its bearings. Whence does he get, or whence does he think he gets, his power?

Certainly not under clause 2, of section 2, of article II. of the constitution. That simply gives the power to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint certain officers. This consent the Senate has refused. But clause 3 of the same section confers upon him another and wholly distinct power, as follows:

> "The President shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."

The retirement of Mr. Douglass and the rejection by the Senate of Mr. Mathews leaves a vacancy, and the President under the above provision, finds full power to fill the office ad interim. His appointment will go to the Senate again within thirty days after its reassembling, and it will once more have the opportunity of acting upon it.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

NOT A SPOILSMAN.

The Appointment of Daniel Magone as Collector of Customs for the Port of New York.

President Cleveland has appointed Daniel Magone, of Ogdensburgh, N. Y., to be Collector of Customs for the port of New York, in place of Mr. Hedden, whose resignation had been received by the President. The appointment is one that in the highest degree reflects credit upon the President's motives and earnestness in carrying out the policy which he so distinctly and unequivocably announced as one of the guiding principles of his Administration when he entered upon it. The President has not been wholly satisfied with the conduct of the office under Mr. Hedden. The most successful Collectors have been lawyers of ability and experience. Many of the questions coming before the Collector for decision are purely legal, and the judicial experience, as the Springfield Republican points out, is especially valuable because it accustoms a man to sift evidence, discern truth and act with promptitude, well defined and intelligent purpose, and the courage of his reasons. Such a man is the new appointee, Daniel Magone. He is a lawyer of marked and admirable legal attainments, a scholar of deep research, a man of great force of character and resoluteness, and a firm believer in the reform policy of President Cleveland. He is known to be the personal choice of the President, and no one who knows the qualities of the man will doubt for a moment that he will successfully conduct the great administrative office, to take charge of which he gives up a large and lucrative practice in St. Lawrence County. Mr. Magone was for many years the trusted friend of and co-worker with Samuel J. Tilden. When Governor Tilden determined to prosecute the canal ring, in 1875, he appointed Mr. Magone one of the commissioners, the other members being John Bigelow, of Orange; Alexander E. Orr, of Brooklyn, and John D. Van Buren, Jr., of New York. Mr. Magone was the only lawyer on the commission, and the successful termination of its difficult work was largely due to the legal acumen, tenacity of purpose and keen instinct shown by him. While always an earnest and consistent Democrat, and for the past fifteen years prominent in the councils of the party, he has never held any other office than that mentioned. He was a member of the Democratic State Committee for a number of years, and was its chairman during the memorable Tilden and Hendricks campaign of 1876.

The appointment of Mr. Magone is a further proof of the President's sincerity of purpose in carrying out the reform policy to which his Administration stands pledged. It is proof, also, that the President is determined that the great office of Collector of the Port shall be administered on purely business principles and in accordance with the existing laws.—Albany Argus.

——While a great majority of the colored voters of Ohio vote the Republican ticket, not one of them has ever received any substantial recognition at the hands of that party. To be sure two or three of them have been honored with an election to the Legislature, an office to which there is a small salary attached, although no colored man in Ohio has been elected to a position in which the incumbent was enabled to make more than a bare living. The Republicans feed the colored voters with husks, while they feed themselves on the fat of the land. The colored people of the North will realize, as their brethren in the South long ago realized, that their best friends do not belong to the Republican party.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

RYE FOR PASTURE.

How It Can Readily Be Made Profitable in Many Ways.

When it can be done, and by proper management it can nearly always be possible, a patch of rye, especially for pasturing or early spring feeding, should be seen on every farm. The size or acreage should be gauged by the number of stock kept on the farm. For winter pasturage it can readily be made profitable, even for that purpose alone, and is used as long as possible, and is then turned under in the spring for a crop of corn, while it can still be made more valuable by allowing it to make a good start to grow, and when the stock are turned into the pasture early in the spring, cut them a feed of rye night and morning. Stock crave something green very early in the spring, and very often they are turned into the pastures before they can possibly be able to secure any thing like a full supply. A supply of rye cut and fed green will aid materially in satisfying their wants and in securing a better start in the pastures. On reasonably good soil it makes a rapid growth and a very large amount of feed can be secured on a small plot. In order to secure a large growth, either for pasturing during the winter or early spring feeding, it should be sown as early as possible in the fall. If the weather is favorable, so that the seed will germinate readily, the 1st of September is none too early. I have found it a good plan to prepare the ground ahead the same as for wheat, as soon as possible after harvest, plowing well and harrowing until the surface is in fine tilth. It will pay to take some pains to make the surface to the depth of three or four inches as fine as possible, rolling, dragging or harrowing, if necessary, to secure this. While I believe in reasonably early seeding, and try to prepare the ground so as to be able to do this, there is very little gained by seeding when the soil is not sufficiently moist to insure a speedy germination of the seed. While, of course, the seed may germinate even after laying in the soil for some time when the ground is too dry to induce germination, yet there is so much risk of loss that when it can be done I prefer to wait until we have sufficient moisture to make the seed grow in as short a time as possible. When some reasonably rich land is put in good tilth before seeding, from one and a half to two bushels per acre should be used, depending somewhat upon the time of sowing and the fertility of the soil. If used for a pasture it should be sown reasonably thick. When sown for grain three or four pecks will be sufficient. Use a common wheat drill and try to have the soil in readiness so as to sow as early as possible in September. If intended for pasture during the winter rather than let grow and use for cutting off and feeding early in the spring, a plat that is easily fenced should be used; if intended to cut off it should be sown as convenient to the stables as possible. It is valuable for all kinds of stock, and will enable you to furnish green food to your stock nearly a month earlier than if no rye is run, besides standing winter grazing better than any other kind or grass or grain. I feel like urging every farmer to run a patch of rye in proportion to the number of stock kept up on the farm, and believe it will pay fully as well as any thing else on the farm.—N. J. Shepherd, in Western Plowman.

"The only thing you want to be careful about when you come anywhere near a bee is never to hit him. That is, you must never attempt to hit him, for the chances are just about nine out of ten that you can't do it. [illegible]

"Now, the difference between a bee and a yellow jacket is just about this. A yellow jacket is the most vile and disreputable insect ever created. They suffer from a chronic disordered temper. It is never safe to pick up a yellow jacket, and nothing makes a yellow jacket more happy, and gives rise to a more general feeling of unhappiness on the part of human susceptibility than to have some unsuspecting person take hold of him. It is then that the little yellow jacket's soul thrills with fiendish delight, and misery enters the unfortunate victim.

"The habits of these insects are peculiar," continued the benevolent man. "A bee never stings a person more than once. His apparatus has a barbed point, and when it enters any substance it stays there. This finishes up the bee for good. He lives but a few minutes after losing his sting."

"There need never be any fear of an attack from bees," said the lecturer, "unless you begin the attack by striking at them. Then they respond with savage impulse. I should say if a whole swarm of bees were to surround a man and sting him the effect would be fatal. The venom of the honey bee is very painful. But when treated kindly they are harmless. This shows their intelligence. They become accustomed to persons in the habit of attending them.

"Do you know," said the man, "that a hornet is the most singular animal, and the most unpleasant one to fight with that people ever knew? A person who is stung by a hornet feels ready for a howling war-dance, and it all comes from not understanding one disagreeable characteristic of them. If a man was sharp a hornet could never sting him. The minute a man strikes or throws a stick at him he instantly responds by making for him in a line as straight as the range of a theodolite. And he always gets there. But if the man saw him coming and only had sense enough to dodge him the hornet wouldn't get there. And what is more peculiar, the hornet would go straight back to the identical point he started from and make another sally for his victim. But just as often as the man kept dodging he would never get stung. It only requires a man with nerve enough to stand his ground and agility enough to dodge quicker than the hornet can fly to make it a very interesting combat.

"But of all the spiteful, wicked and uncompromising insects, save me from either a yellow-jacket or a wasp. There is no getting away from them, and when they sting once they sting a dozen times in different parts of the body. They keep right at it, and a man may try to hit them with a stick or his hat all day and miss them every time. Wasps make their nests in the ceiling of a room or the roof of a barn. Hornets are generally found in clumps of fruit-trees, shrubbery, or fences."—Philadelphia Press.

INSANE HOTEL GUESTS.

Ridiculous Capers Cut by a Demented Man in a Philadelphia Hostelry.

The proprietor of one of the large hotels on Broad street, who has been in the business many years, in speaking upon the subject of insane guests, said that of course they were always transient guests, and were got rid of as soon as their ailment was discovered. "But," said he, "they will slip in on the most experienced clerks. They often cut up ridiculous capers after they have been at the hotel a short time. They are too sly to show themselves at first. I remember upon one occasion, in another city, a very old gentleman registered at a hotel and remained for a week, and seemed to be engaged in business which occupied a great deal of his time. One day the clerks were amazed and mystified at the appearance early in the morning of a score of men, girls and boys with a wonderful assortment of curs. For a time there was such a yelping and snorting about the hotel corridors that pandemonium seemed to have emptied itself there. The motley crowd of dog peddlers came to sell their dogs to Mr. R. It was discovered that the man had a notion that if he could find a dog with a certain white mark upon its forehead he could dispose of it to the fanciers at a fabulous price. He had been through the by-ways of the city engaging urchins and such other people as he could induce to engage in the hunt to bring such a cur to the hotel on a certain day, if found. We cleared the mob out and turned the man over to the police, who found his friends and sent him home. He had been insane on the dog question for years. You might find cases enough as queer as this one to fill a book, for the insane guest is known to all the big hotels."—Philadelphia Record.

—When a woman dashed into the pilot-house of a Penobscott river excursion steamer that had just left the Buckaport wharf, a few days ago, and frantically demanded to be put ashore, the captain did not understand it. Her bonnet was on all right, she had her shawl-strap in her hand, and her lunch-basket was visible also. Her explanation was that she had left her baby on the wharf. The boat went back after it.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Delays Are Dangerous

The time to take a medicine is when Nature gives her first warning. That tired feeling is often the forerunner of serious disease, which may be warded off if you attend to yourself in time. It will purify, vitalize and enrich your blood, create an appetite and tone the digestive organs, cure headache, biliousness and dyspepsia, rouse and regulate the liver and kidneys, and give strength to the whole body.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

DARK WAR CLOUDS

Again Gathering Over the Nations of Europe.

Russia Looms up as the Arbiter of all the European Continent.

London, Sept. 6.—Sir J. Fergusson, Under Foreign Secretary, stated in the House of Commons this afternoon that a change in the Government of Bulgaria can only occur in accordance with the treaty of Berlin and with the consent of the signatory Powers to that treaty. England, he said, had no separate interests in reference to Bulgaria. The election of a new Prince of Bulgaria must be unanimous. [illegible] The Government, said the speaker, had hoped much from the ability and great qualities of Prince Alexander, and they deplored the treachery and violence which had interrupted his reign. His final decision to abandon his work in Bulgaria was greatly regretted. Prince Alexander will to-morrow proclaim his abdication. The Russian Consulates in Bulgaria are distributing for signature petitions to the Czar favoring the election of the Prince of Oldenburg as successor to Prince Alexander. Prince Alexander's decision to abdicate is attributed partly to loss of vigor of mind consequent upon the severe trials which he has undergone lately. It is believed that his departure from Bulgaria is likely to result in civil war. Before Prince Alexander announced his intention to quit the throne he received a telegram from Prince Bismarck recommending that he abdicate in order to save Bulgaria. The Morning Post says: We greatly doubt whether Prince Bismarck's policy will insure the peace of Europe. Europe will have no peace until the wrongs Russia has inflicted on a rising people are avenged. Whatever may be the reasons which induced Prince Bismarck to sacrifice Prince Alexander to the personal animosity of the Czar, we can not believe that Europe will approve a policy tending to make the Czar arbiter of the whole continent. The Chronicle blames Prince Bismarck for creating the present critical situation, and says the clouds in the Balkans are darker and more lurid than ever.

A Celestial Wanderer.

New York, Sept. 6.—Last evening a brilliant meteor was observable in New York and Brooklyn. It first appeared in the southern sky, where it looked like a planet. This star-like body was brighter than the moon. When first noticed the meteor had no perceptible motion, but steadily increased apparently in size and brilliancy. After an interval of perhaps half a minute from the time it was first observed a motion was noticeable. Slowly but steadily it passed from south to north across the eastern sky. Usually meteors have a spasmodic and rapid motion and disappear suddenly. This meteor retained its brilliancy long after it had reached the northeast, where it seemed gradually to dissolve into space. A slight train of fire followed in its wake.

President's Reply to Queen Victoria.

Washington, Sept. 6.—The President has sent the following reply to Queen Victoria's telegram of sympathy for the earthquake sufferers:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, Sept. 4, 1886.

To Victoria, Queen and Empress, Balmoral, Scotland:

Your Majesty's expression of sympathy for the sufferers by the earthquake is warmly appreciated, and awakes grateful response in American hearts.

GROVER CLEVELAND, President.

A Strange Death.

New York, Sept. 6.—Emma Hubbard, of Amityville, L. I., started to lead her father's horse to a brook on the farm, a short distance west of Amityville. After a long time her absence created alarm, and, upon searching for her, her father found her lifeless body beside the brook. Her throat and neck were terribly mangled, and blood stains were on her body and clothing. The evidences were, it is reported, that the horse fastened his teeth in her throat.

Explosion of a Natural Gas Well.

Keokuk, Ia., Sept. 6.—By an explosion of natural gas in a sixty-foot well, being dug five miles from Warsaw, Ill., to-day, Henry Miller was killed, John Hope probably fatally injured, and Homer McMahon and Charles Hoskins fearfully burned. Miller was frightfully burned, the skin of his entire body peeling off in a few minutes after the explosion, which was caused by taking a lighted lamp into the well.

Tracking Davitt.

Chicago, Sept. 6.—A Daily News special from Ishpeming, Mich., says: "Michael Davitt, on his trip through Northern Michigan, was followed by a shorthand reporter in the pay of the British Government. All of his speeches and some of his private conversations were taken down in full by this indefatigable agent of the English authorities.

Brilliant Display of Meteors.

Columbus, S. C., Sept. 6.—Another distinct shock was felt in this city last night at 11:07 o'clock, accompanied by the usual roaring sounds. At intervals of five minutes thereafter two remarkably brilliant and unusually large meteors shot across the skies, from north to south.

The Lantern Exploded.

Warsaw, Ill., Sept. 6.—Henry Miller, fifteen, was killed to-day near here while descending into a well with a lantern in his hand, which exploded, the young man falling to the bottom. John Hays, standing at the mouth of the well, was seriously burned.

—A Muscogee County farmer claims that he was recently breaking a young mule. A stalwart negro man mounted the mule in the middle of the lot and the spectators mounted the fence. The mule began to buck and dance at the same time. A cloud of dust enveloped him and his rider, and unearthly noises came from the midst of the dust-cloud. When the cloud of dust cleared away the mule was quietly eating out of his trough in the stall, and one of the negro's knit suspenders was wrapped tightly around his left hind leg. No other portion of the negro has yet been discovered.—Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer.

—Whooping-cough paroxysms, it is well known, are sensibly ameliorated by the atmosphere of gas-works, and there is some reason for the belief that cures of the disease are affected by breathing such air. Dr. W. T. Greene suggests an easily available improvement on the works for this purpose. His plan is to attach a piece of rubber tubing to a burner, the tubing being long enough to reach the floor. The gas is turned on just enough to make a perceptible odor, and the child is to inhale it for a few minutes at a time as often as convenient.—Chicago Times.

IOWA'S CURIOSITY.

The Great Well Still Flowing, and Efforts to Plug It Prove Unavailing.

Belle Plaine, Ia., Sept. 5.—The great well still flows. For a short time last evening it was partially shut off. The great cone, having been enlarged to thirty-six inches, was lowered full of sand. It went easily for sixty feet, when it became necessary to drive it, and the 1,800-pound hammer was applied to the five-inch pipe connected with the cone. This pipe stood thirty feet above the surface. After a few strokes had been given, the flow of water was so much diminished that the people began to shake hands and many bags of sand were thrown in to give additional weight to the cone to fill up the aperture. The big hammer was again applied and after a few strokes the pipe shot down into the water like a rocket [illegible] upward. A swift gush of water, a gurgle, and the hopes of all were buried out of sight with the cone and its connecting pipe. The sixteen-inch pipe heretofore mentioned is at the bottom, and the belief is that the cone has gone down until it struck. That would leave it [illegible] feet from the bottom and the upper end forty feet from the surface.

My constant special solicitude has been for my army and officers. I consider them my family, my children, and I have felt secure in my personal position when I have seen myself surrounded by officers who had been my comrades in our struggles for the glory of Bulgaria. * * * I can not remain in Bulgaria, for the Czar will not permit me, because my presence is inimical to the interests of the country. I am forced to quit the throne."

She traveled under an assumed name in Michigan, but was overhauled at Reed City and brought back to-night. The authorities are investigating the deaths of numerous other infants born out of wedlock, supposed to have been put to death by her.

Williamsport, Pa., Sept. 5.—Word has been received here of a sickening calamity which occurred about midnight last night, five miles and a half above Jonestown on the line of the Williamsport and North Branch railroad, where a large number of Hungarian laborers are employed on an extension of the road. A shanty in which over twenty of these men lodged caught fire last night from the overturning of a stove while the men were asleep. Sixteen men slept on the second floor. Those on the first floor and all on the second floor but seven succeeded in getting out. The others were left to their fate and were roasted alive in the burning shanty. Their charred remains were afterward found in the ruins. The men who escaped were so panic-stricken that they made no efforts to save their companions. The remains of the seven dead were removed to Jonestown to await the arrival of the coroner from Laporte. The names of the victims have not yet been received. A Hungarian named Jeninsky was murdered and his body hidden under a shanty on the same railroad at Elklick. A short time since, when the shanty was torn down, portions of human remains were found in a quantity of bloody straw. The men who occupied the shanty have disappeared.

THE PRINCE'S PERIL.

A conflict between the revolutionists and the followers of Prince Alexander is feared at Sofia. Prince Alexander has promised King Milan to send a diplomatic agent to Servia. The revolutionary regiments here have surrendered unconditionally to Prince Alexander and applied to him for clemency. Bulgaria is now tranquil.

DESOLATION.

The Sad Scenes That Meet the Eye in Charleston.

Charleston, S. C., Sept. 5.—The number of deaths from the earthquake up to date is sixty-one and out of the hundreds wounded more will probably die. The wreck of the city is pretty complete, and the damage will be enormous. There are very few houses of brick in the city uninjured and hundreds of buildings that appear comparatively unharmed are so shaken they will have to come down. This makes it difficult to estimate the damage but it is not putting it too strong to say that Charleston, with all the experiences of bombardment and cyclone, was never so badly shattered [illegible]. The sight is a sad one. The people, after the terror of their experience, are nervous and expectant. They are camped in the public squares and parks, very few venturing into houses, and none into brick or stone buildings. The shocks still continue, quite a severe one being felt at 8 o'clock this evening, which sent what few people were under cover into the street. There was a disagreeable sulphurous smell in the air, which has been noticed since the beginning of the shocks. At Summerville the shocks continued but a few minutes apart, and heavy rumbling sounds precedes and accompanies each shock. Fissures have opened in the earth at Summerville and other places. The city and country surrounding is an immense camp, nearly all the people living in improvised tents or sleeping in covered wagons. The sight along the railroad from Summerville to Charleston is a strange one; immense fires of pitch-pine lighting up the scene all along the route. The sensation is strangely terrifying, and one must know something of it personally to fully appreciate the horrors of the experience these people have been subjected to, and the wild scenes that have been enacted here. There is no certainty for the future. There is, of course, hope that the worst is passed, and as long as the disturbances continue the people live in fear and trembling. The center of the disturbance seems to be at Summerville, a pretty town used a good deal for a summer resort by Charleston people, and lying on the S. C. railway, twenty-seven miles away. A strange occurrence was the twisting of the railroad there by the earthquake, and the moving of the track at one place literally three or four feet.

THE $30,000 PACKAGE.

Rumor That It Has Been Found in a Safe Sent From Philadelphia to Iowa.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy tobaccos have sold at even full prices, both for medium and good grades, while low grades have been occasionally irregular without any final noticeable changes in prices. The weather conditions have been perfect but not forcing, with ample moisture in the air and soil. August has quite redeemed the deficiencies of July, bringing the plants forward with great spread of leaf and increase of weight. The crop has entitled itself for a race against time and everything at present is promising. The weather has been of a character to stimulate the flow of sap and quicken the growth, the ripening tendency being suspended. If this be succeeded presently by dry and cool weather the crop will come in, barring frost, in good form as to character and fineness, and also relatively so in point of quantity, but the yield will not be an average in quantity. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows for full weight packages:

	Dark and Heavy	Burley
Trash	$1 75@ 2 25	$2 00@ 3 00
Common lugs	2 50@ 3 00	1 25@ 5 00
Medium lugs	3 25@ 4 25	3 25@ 4 50
Good lugs	4 50@ 5 25	5 75@ 6 75
Common leaf	5 00@ 5 50	6 25@ 6 75
Medium leaf	6 00@ 6 75	7 25@ 9 50
Good leaf	7 50@ 9 00	10 00@12 50
Selections	9 00@10 50	14 00@15 50
Wrappers	12 00@18 25	16 00@24 50

The bodies of the five persons drowned in Green river, near Mammoth Cave, were recovered after a two days' search by the entire community. A great quantity of dynamite was exploded in the river, in order to raise the bodies. One of the horses had uncoupled the wagon in his death struggles, and the wagon-bed floated down stream. It was strong enough to have bore the weight of the entire party had they remained in it. The other horse swam down the river 300 yards, dragging his dead companion and the fore wheels of the wagon. The young man who was drowned was an excellent swimmer, and it is thought that the women and children clung to him until all of them were lost. All the victims, with the exception of the young man, who lived in Cave City, lived in Monroe County, and were returning from a visit to Greyson. The husband of one of the women drowned had been left behind by reason of illness, and when the news of the death of his wife and child was told him, he relapsed into a comatose condition, and is not expected to recover.

A special to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: "John S. Rhea, a lawyer at Russellville, is a prominent candidate for Congress in the Third District, now represented by John E. Halsell. The latter is a candidate for re-election, and a hot contest for the Democratic nomination is in progress. At a recent public meeting at Elkton, Rhea, in a speech, charged one T. F. Hite with certain electioneering statements in behalf of Halsell. Hite sent Rhea a note asking for a retraction, which was refused. Hite then sent a challenge to a duel. Upon receipt of this challenge, Mr. Rhea told the bearer he would answer him soon, and going to his room, wrote a reply. Rhea declined the challenge to fight a duel for several reasons. One was because he had no sort of sympathy for the code that with deliberate intent sought the shedding of one's own or another's blood. Another was that the laws of God and man forbade it, and the final reason was that he had one dependent upon him for support and owed protection to her, and that acceptance would disbar him from the practice of the profession he had adopted as a means of livelihood, and would leave him without means of support."

A soldier named Richardson, residing at Milton, Trimble County, has been granted a pension by Acting Commissioner of Pensions McLean. AN ISSUE BADLY WANTED.

Some Birds of Ill Omen the Republicans, Flopping Around Aimlessly and Disconsolately.

Our Republican friends are very much perplexed as to what they can furnish for an issue the next time they go before the people. The bloody shirt has become such a venerable chestnut that it no longer evokes even a laugh. All the predictions of the failure of the Democratic Administration have come to naught and the hopes of a split in the party have not been realized. The fishery question failed to materialize at the critical moment, and the venom of ex-ministers, ex-secretaries and other extinguished representatives of Republican management of the State Department, was poured out in vain. The excellent judgment and calm, deliberative spirit displayed by Secretary Bayard in connection with this question had the effect of allaying the mischievous spirit which the enemies of the Administration sought to stir up. The would-be authorities on the foreign policy of the Government attempted to make an issue out of the Cutting affair, with the same fruitless result. Congress also refused to furnish the desired issue to our bewildered Republican friends, for it has been incontestably shown that the Democratic House acted as a wholesome check on the extravagance and unscrupulous measures of the Republican Senate. The popularity of the President has increased in proportion to the virulence of the attacks made upon him. His manly, consistent course in connection with the Civil-Service law and his trenchant vetoes of jobs and swindling schemes have gained for him fresh proofs of the esteem and affection of the people whose interests he has heart.

Never was there an Administration so shamelessly attacked and misrepresented and against which all the batteries of slander and falsehood were so industriously plied. But the cowardly methods of warfare employed by the enemy have had a boomerang effect, and the demoralized host that so long ruled the country in the insolence of unbridled power, and could not at first be brought to realize that the people had driven them forever from the positions they had abused, are now looking around in pitiable perplexity for an issue. The time for search is becoming uncomfortably short. The country is prospering under Democratic rule; abuses have disappeared from the offices of the Government; economy has succeeded extravagance and peculation, and confidence has been re-established in the business world. The elections this fall will have an important bearing upon the control of the Senate during the latter half of President Cleveland's Administration. Twenty-five Democrats and twenty-six Republicans hold over from the present Congress, and of the vacant seats the Democrats are certain of nine and the Republicans of the same number. The doubtful Legislatures on which will depend the political complexion of the next Senate are those of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, Michigan, California and Nevada. The Democrats need five of these to have a majority in the Senate. They have a good chance of carrying New York, New Jersey, Indiana, Michigan and Connecticut. The cause of the anxiety of the Republicans for an issue is, therefore, easily explained. The "last bulwark of Republicanism" is in great danger of being carried away, this fall, by the party which has earned the confidence and support of the people.—Albany Argus.

Peace Not Yet Declared.

It seems that the Blaine fight against Senator Edmunds in Vermont has not only not subsided since the declaration of the Republican State convention in his favor, but is becoming hotter than ever now that nominations for the Legislature are being made. The county conventions in nominating candidates for the Senate have very generally declared for the re-election of Edmunds, but the fight is going on chiefly in the canvass for representatives in the towns. There are only thirty members of the Senate of Vermont, while there are 240 Representatives, and in a joint convention the power of the former will be small. The opposition to Senator Edmunds emanates from the Blaine men, who have never forgiven him for refusing to raise his voice for a candidate whose character he knew and despised, but it is industriously fostered by the great railroad magnate of the State, J. Gregory Smith, who aspires to his seat. Smith has money and a certain kind of power, and his emissaries are working throughout Vermont to secure members of the Legislature in his interest.—N. Y. Times.

Slaughtering Each Other.

If there is any one thing more than honesty which the Republicans of Ohio lack it is harmony. Just now they are at swords' points and are ready to slaughter each other at the polls. Not content with butchering each other they go outside of their State to stab other and better men. That weak Congressman, Grosvenor, who climbed into public life by means of his wealth, told a reporter the other day that Jeff Davis would get more votes in Ohio than General John A. Logan. This hatred of the Illinois Senator, who bolstered Blaine in 1884, is due to the fact that he refused to aid Ohio Republicans in stealing a seat in the United States Senate by ousting Senator Payne on groundless rumors and base falsehoods. Logan's name will be remembered with respect long after all recollection of the Ohio scoundrels who are abusing him is gone. Logan is not a saint, but he is head and shoulders above the Republicans of the Buckeye State who are seeking to injure him.—Buffalo Times.

—We are inclined to agree with the World that the President departed widely from the Democratic policy of Jeffersonian simplicity when he traveled from Washington in a special car of mahogany, elegantly fitted up with silk, satin and velvet. It would have been more in accordance with the old doctrine for the party to have traveled on a hand-car, Mrs. Cleveland sitting on an old-fashioned band-box with her knitting in her hand. Verily the President has committed a great sin in departing from the custom of a half century ago.—New Haven Register.

—Edmunds has declared in favor of the wild West for a Presidential candidate for the party. Which is another way of intimating that Mr. Blaine lags superfluous on the political stage.—Albany Argus.

SOMETHING AGGRESSIVE.

The Efforts Being Made by Mr. Blaine's Friends in the Maine Campaign to Give Him a Presidential "Boom."

To a person innocent in the ways of politics it must seem very strange that up in Maine, a State which two years ago gave a Republican majority of nearly 14,000, the campaign for the election of a Governor and Congressman is this year to be conducted with all the preparations of a Presidential year, including not only a continuous series of speeches by Maine's "tattooed" statesman, Mr. Blaine, but nightly speeches by as many political orators from other States as can be induced to go down East. The Augusta correspondent of the Boston Herald throws some light on the situation. As every one knows (who believes all he hears), the Presidential nomination in 1884 was forced on Mr. Blaine against his inclination. Having, however, got a taste of running for the high office, he seems to like the occupation, and this year's Maine campaign is all planned to assist him in gratifying his ambition. The correspondent quoted tells us that "it will be the first time in many years that Mr. Blaine has been assigned to so many speeches;" that "for weeks he has been preparing himself for his efforts;" that "it is believed that he intends to strike the keynote of the next Presidential campaign;" that Representative Dingley is predicting on the stump "that Mr. Blaine will again lead the Republicans," and that a vote for Bodwell for Governor is considered a vote for Blaine's nomination in 1888; this change in Mr. Blaine's tactics, as compared with his "lying low" methods in 1884, is undoubtedly a confession of weakness. He has heard, as persons who talk with leading Republicans from all parts of the country are hearing, the sentiment that the Republican party has had the name Blaine dinged into its ears long enough; that the campaign of 1888, to be successful, must be something else than defensive, and that it is time for the party to present to the country a new name which will not labor under any personal handicap. Knowing the prevalence of these sentiments, the man in Maine plans to renew his own prominence by having a lively campaign in his own State, of which he will be the central figure, in order that he may not drop out of the list of eligibles. Well, this may be fun for him, and if his coming speeches involve him in his usual self-contradictions, it may do his party some service by again setting forth his inferior qualities as a candidate.—N. Y. Post.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

—Should the Republicans, through the efforts of Mr. Blaine, succeed in carrying Maine, it is likely that they may succeed in retaining their grip on Vermont.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—An exchange suggests that James G. Blaine and Rollin M. Squire would make an excellent Presidential ticket for the Republicans with a platform "for vindication only." That's an excellent idea, except that the platform might be condensed to the words: "Burn this letter."—Harrisburg Patriot.

—While Logan is reveling in a perfect garden of Eden Blaine is perspiring over twelve "greatest efforts," with which he hopes to keep Maine corralled until the snow flies in 1888. It is mighty disagreeable to have a big ambition and an uncertain State on one's hands at precisely the same moment.—Chicago News.

—It was the Democratic party that gave our Nation its foreign influence, and compelled foreign respect. It remained for Republican tuft-hunting diplomacy to make us the despised of all nations. The Democratic party acquired the territory of Louisiana, Arkansas, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, Colorado and the Indian Territory from France; Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada and California from Mexico, and Florida from Spain. It raised our merchant marine to the second place, and made our navy feared over the world. It will continue the record.—Indiana State Sentinel.

—We ask—and we ask it in all seriousness, too—is it not about time that the people paused in their mad career to destruction to ask of themselves whither are they going? In the brief space of twenty-four months they have not only defeated for President the brilliant Republican leader, whose name has ever been the rallying cry for true reformers of the Keifer school, but they have relegated to private life many of his chosen advisers. The brilliant Chandler's voice is heard no more in the councils of the Nation; the gallant Robeson incites our heroic navy to no deeds of valor; Teller is still in the Senate, but he is shorn of half his power, and the lonely Elkins wanders from east to west, from north to south, and has not where to lay his political head.—Philadelphia Times.

The New Navy.

The preliminary steps toward the creation of a new navy are now being taken. It is a matter of congratulation that the near future promises the realization of the hopes of the people in that direction. It has long since been a recognized weakness of the country that its marine armament has been inferior to that of any other respectable Power. But the fact that the naval authorities have been involved in corrupt combinations with ship-builders restrained Congress from voting the necessary appropriations to accomplish it.

The present administration of the Navy Department has proved its freedom from any corrupt collusion, and the consequence is that the appropriations have been made and the work will soon be begun. The new navy will consist of eight war vessels and one dynamite gun boat. Secretary Whitney is employing every available means of getting the best results from the authority vested in him to disburse the money voted for the purpose. He is getting the most approved designs and will compel the full performance of the contracts by which the building of the vessels will be awarded.

The two cruisers and dispatch boat contracted for by the late Administration and the six vessels now about to be commenced will make a fair start for a navy. They are to be of various types and widely different in capacity as well as in speed and power. They will be modern in every respect and equal in every particular to the best ships of other Governments. The armament will be as perfect as the vessels will be complete and the new navy may reach the high standard that the old one did in its days of honest management.—Harrisburg Patriot.

The Courier-Journal and Commercial are having a hot race for Congress. They are making the race by proxy.

Hons. John G. Carlisle and W. S. Holman, opened the Ohio Democratic campaign at Batavia, Ohio yesterday.

The State officials all pretended to have been in their offices at Frankfort when the earthquake occurred last week. "Git out."

The race for Congress in the Louisville district is now at white heat. The Louisville postoffice is proving a very poisonous thorn in the political flesh of that district.

The Recorder is decidedly in favor of the increased circulation of silver, and the avenues leading to its pocket will at all times be found ready to expedite its movements.

The quakes were felt in the South last Sunday, but were not so severe as to do any damage. There are numerous theories as to the cause of the earthquake, but we believe the true theory is, no one knows what the disturbing agency is.

Within the last six weeks the crops in this county have matured very favorably. The corn crop is at least an average crop. The tobacco will not produce as many pounds as did last year's crop, but the yield will be greatly in excess of that anticipated about the first of August.

At the 21st annual session of the Kentucky Sunday-school Union the State was divided into fifteen districts. Kenton, Campbell, Pendleton, Grant, Owen, Trimble, Carroll, Gallatin and Boone, compose the fifteenth district, with Geo. B. Jennings, of Newport District President, and W. E. Hudson, jr., of Walton, this county, Vice-President for Boone county.

The interior of Morgan Academy is now in the most presentable condition we ever saw it, and its renovation is due the energy of the two young men who have charge of the school. They are the first teachers, for a long time, that have manifested any concern as to the appearance of the building. The surroundings of the scholars in that institution now have an inviting appearance.

In the fourth Congressional district Hon. Thomas A. Robertson was defeated in the primary election for renomination for Congress, by A. R. Montgomery. Mr. Robertson says: "I am for Alex. Montgomery for Congress, and hope his majority will be as big as mine was two years ago. There is nothing small about me but the vote I got, and it was large enough for ordinary occasions."

The Farmers Alliance which met in Indianapolis on the first day of this month, selected a committee which was authorized to arrange for a meeting of the Alliance in Cincinnati on the 22nd day of February 1886. It seems that the farmers are beginning to realize the necessity of their taking an active part in the politics of the country, and the sooner they manifest their power the better it will be for the country.

Senator Voorhees, who has recently been charged with entertaining Vice Presidential aspirations, has just been interviewed on the subject and says: "The idea of my surrendering the United States Senatorship, a position that fills the full measure of my ambition for the Vice Presidency. It is an office worthy any American citizen, but in which I could be of no service to a friend whether he applied for the position of watchman or Minister abroad. No intelligent friend would ask me to take the office. I wouldn't have it.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of this Congressional district, held in Newport last Saturday, a convention to nominate a candidate for Congress in this district was called to meet in Newport at 12 o'clock m., Tuesday, October 5th. The executive committees of the several counties composing the district, will decide upon the manner and time of selecting the delegates. The counties are entitled, under the order of the committee, to delegates as follows:

Boone	8
Campbell	16
Carroll	7
Gallatin	4
Grant	7
Kenton	22
Pendleton	8
Trimble	5

Kentucky is ahead again. If you don't believe it read the following from a late [illegible] the Wash[illegible]:

"The following item, [illegible] with a [illegible] was received from Kentucky this morning. [illegible] Vermont [illegible] up their hands in [illegible] when they hear of [illegible] in Kentucky, but if they will look at the last [illegible] Miller they will discover that Kentucky contributes one-tenth as much toward the [illegible] and dignity of the nation as Vermont does and has a right to vote [illegible] as much [illegible] as that State does. Don't you think so Mr. Editor?"

Later. We have sampled the jug. Hurrah for Kentucky! We can wipe the ground up with anything that walks on two legs in Vermont. Whoopee!—[Ex.

The interest in the public schools in this county seems to have been on the improve for the past few years, but notwithstanding this fact parents, as a general thing, are very derelict in some of their simplest duties toward the schools, only one of which we will briefly refer to. All parents will admit that it is a duty they owe their children to visit the schools and discover any neglect on the part of the teachers in the discharge of their duties toward the children. The teacher who is honestly at work in the interest of his or her pupils, is always glad to have the patrons call and see what is being done to improve the child. Frequent visits to a school stimulates both pupils and teacher, and brings about most beneficial results. A school which is entirely neglected by the patrons as to visits is in great danger of being sadly neglected by the teacher, who loses all interest and only puts in the time in order that he may draw his salary when due. Parents can do nothing that will have a more salutary effect than frequent visits to their schools. We urge upon the parents in this county that they visit the schools attended by their children more frequent in the future.

The Harvest Home last Saturday created considerable talk in favor of an agricultural fair in this county, and from a very limited canvass of the subject, the indications are that should the Harvest Home Association desire to do so, it could, in a short time, and without any very great effort, increase its capital stock to an amount sufficient to put in operation a good county fair of three or more days. The Harvest Home ground is very favorably located for nearly every section of the county, and at a point which would protect it from that rowdy element with which all fairs located near a large town are annoyed. The exhibition at that point would be, in a manner, purely of Boone county production, and for that only would the management find it necessary to cater. The people of the county want some place at which all faiths and creeds can meet once a year in social intercourse, and on a common ground. Nothing demoralizing is a necessary attribute of a county fair. It is calculated to cultivate in the community a desire to become more proficient in the arts of every day life, and the friendly competitions would be anxiously looked forward to from year to year. The consideration of the question of expanding the Harvest Home into a county fair is commended to the members of the Harvest Home Association.

The shock of earthquake which was felt throughout this country Tuesday night of last week, concentrated its destruction on the city of Charleston, S. C., where many houses were wrecked and hundreds of people rendered homeless, and forced to take up their abode in the streets. No such disaster as that visited upon Charleston last week, ever before resulted from an earthquake in this county. Charleston is a very old city and owes its origin to a party of English colonists who established themselves in the year 1669, the grant of lands to the whole of the Carolinas having been made in 1663. Much of the old colonial property that was built as the result of this settlement has been destroyed in the recent earthquake. Many of the old historical buildings, save their foundations, have now passed out of existence. Charleston has a peculiar location, reaching out into the sea as a tongue of land, and is bounded on one side by the Ashley and the other by the Cooper rivers, and by this combination makes one of the most commodious harbors in the United States. It is the only city on the American continent from which the ocean can be distinctly seen. Around this bay is a beadwork of rich islands, which produces the premium rice and cotton of the world, at the same time abound in game that attract our best sportsmen. Commercially speaking, the fruit, sugar, coffee, tobacco and other tropical productions of Cuba, the West Indies and South America come directly to the port. Steamers connect it weekly with New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore and elsewhere, and to these several points large [illegible] shipments [illegible]. Beginning [illegible] the early spring [illegible] every description [illegible] the North. In addition [illegible] phosphate rock due in the immediate vicinity with northern capital which has made the place commercial[illegible] up a trade which represents nearly [illegible].

The Masonic Grand Lodge of this State has sent the Charleston sufferers $[illegible].

Cynthiana thinks she will have a fair next year—she is sorry that she didn't this year.

Gov. Leslie contested the election of Carr, but the Central Election Board gave Carr the certificate.

Five tobacco barns, near [illegible]ville, containing last year's crops, were blown down and contents badly damaged.

The time is not far distant in this State when political corruption will break down by the force of its own weight.—Lingrapp Gazette.

Within the next two weeks the tobacco crop will be about cut. The crop is much better than was expected.—Warsaw Independent.

Lebanon has had another convention. It ended when a mob blew out the lights and scared the delegates out of the hall.—Transcript.

One hundred Hungarians will be put to work on the Southside Railroad above Augusta. They can not speak a word of English and are know by numbers.

Lightning killed a fine jack in the stable of Col. I. Shelby Irvine, of Madison county. Col. Irvine had sold the jack to southern parties for $1,000, had received instructions to draw through the bank for the amount, and was only awaiting instructions as to shipment.

John Reid was elected Mayor of Dayton, Ky., but it was discovered that there was no record evidence of his being naturalized, and the city charter requiring that all city officers shall have been qualified voters for one year, the office of Mayor was declared vacant.

The precinct meetings in Nicholas county on Saturday resulted in a victory for Judge Wall and Judge Savage, it being understood that a combination was formed by which the delegation to be selected next Saturday will be composed of the friends of the two candidates above mentioned. To a close observer, the result in Nicholas looks like the nomination of Judge Walls at Augusta, beyond a doubt.—Maysville Bulletin.

It is a healthy sign that the Congression Campaign Committee of both parties are pinched for money and that neither the Republicans nor the Democrats in the departments are making very liberal "voluntary contributions" to their fund. It is an indication that the old abuses of "assessments" has been pretty well broken up when neither the fear of losing their places opens the pockets of one set nor the hope of retaining them those of the other set.—Maysville Eagle.

Mayor Reed closes the first complete year of his administration of municipal affairs with a surplus in the treasury. He has done what many believed impossible; he has lived within his income. This is truly a new departure, and it is most significant. The first step in municipal reform is to keep expenses within the revenue limit. That this has been done once proves that it can be done, and hereafter it will be the test of efficiency. This achievement has not been an easy one, and full credit should be given to a faithful officer.—C.-J.

The time for electing Senator Beck's successor is rapidly approaching, and that there should be any other than an unanimous voice for his reelection is painful in the extreme. No man in the Senate has been more vigorous during the last long and arduous session than he and for the people of our State to make a public sacrifice of him now, when nearly every State in the Union would be glad to have such a man to elect, would be an act of folly and ingratitude, equaled only by the refusal of the National Convention in 1880 to nominate the lamented Tilden.—Lexington Drummer.

The refusal of John S. Rhea to fight a duel is something which would have been incomprehensible to many thousands of his contemporaries at the time they were of his present age. Many of us can remember when a Kentucky young man, strong and brilliant, with a public reputation, would have been branded a coward by general sentiment for declining to fight with a challenger. To-day there will be nobody to deny that young Rhea acted sensibly and courageously. Such a change of [illegible] ... the nature of the people. [illegible] ... [illegible]ville Commercial.

The Democratic Congressional Committee met in Lexington on the 1st Inst., and decided that if no one is announced in opposition to Congressman Breckinridge within ten days from that date, that the chairman is authorized to declare him the nominee of the party.

John G. Carlisle in a private letter to a friend in Carrollton says: "My purpose is to devote October and all of November until the day of election, to the canvass of the district, and I will speak two or three times in Carroll." Come when he may he will have an immense hearing; and whether he come or not the Democracy of Carroll will rally to his support on election day in solid phalanx. Mr. Carlisle is a National man, his influence is needed in doubtful districts and States and the Democrats of this district are of a type who do not barter their suffrages for the flattery of personal attention, or for any other consideration.—Carrollton Democrat.

A friend of ex-President Arthur reports that he has lost flesh until he is a mere shadow of his former self. He thinks the inevitable result is only a question of time.

One day last week, Esquire L. A. Loder, of Petersburg, held an inquest on the body of an infant found floating in the river to which it had evidently been consigned to hide the shame of erring humanity. The child had not floated any very great distance.

While coming from the city one day last week, we passed T. J. Coyle, of the Beaver Lick country, on the pike, and in command of one four-horse and three two-horse wagons, which were loaded with a new saw-mill, that locates in that neighborhood.

D. W. Calvert, sone of Samuel Calvert of East Bend, died of lock-jaw at his home in Cummingsville last Thursday night. For several years Mr. Calvert has been engaged on the Commercial Gazette, previous to which time he published papers in Rising Sun and Aurora, Indiana.

When we saw Chas. Schramm, of Petersburg, in town Monday we thought it was some candidate for governor. Charley has been in the West for some time, and has gained flesh so rapidly that we hardly knew him. Chas. is a great ladies man and says the western country might suit some people, but it don't suit him—too lonesome.

THE HARVEST HOME.

From 2,500 to 3,000 People attended the Fourth Annual Picnic

A Fine Day—A Big Crowd—Good Order—Fine Exhibition and Lots of Dancing for the Young

THE LOCATION IS PERMANENT.

Four years ago the first Harvest Home Picnic was given at Parlor Grove. The interest manifested in the exhibition of articles on which premiums were given, induced the management to increase the scope of its premium list from year to year, which has been followed by an increased attendance of both young and old, and the success of the one given last Saturday exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine members of the association, which is now known as the Boone County Harvest Home Association.

The first three picnics were given at Parlor Grove, which is a delightful and well arranged place for public assemblages, but is not easy of access to most of the county people, so some time since the association was reorganized, several new members were admitted, and the work of acquiring a new location for the Harvest Home set in motion. In a short time five acres of land near Limaburg, on the old North Bend road, were leased from W. B. Craven, for five years. The erection of the necessary buildings was at once commenced, and last Saturday, the grounds on which is located a dancing platform 48x80 feet under a roof, were dedicated by the Annual Harvest Home, which was attended by a crowd ranging from 2,500 to 3,000 people coming from all parts of the county, besides many familiar faces from Kenton county and the State of Ohio, were recognized in the throng.

As the various articles were entered for exhibition Saturday they were arranged in a temporary enclosure for that purpose, and when the secretary's book closed the exhibit was unexpectedly large and a most creditable display of farm and garden produce and the handiwork of the ladies; indeed, we have seen less creditable displays at the pretentious county fairs.

The judges in the various departments in more than one instance found it difficult to discriminate in favor of any particular entry, so nearly equal were the merits of the several competing articles, but the decisions had to come, and often hesitatingly was the blue ribbon adjusted.

While the exhibitors and many others were interesting themselves in the numerous exhibits, the lovers of the "fantastic tart," were crowding the large platform and keeping time to the elegant music, with flying feet. From the time the band arrived in the morning until half past five o'clock in the afternoon the floor was the scene of an uninterrupted pleasure to the young and gay.

It has been a long time since so many Boone county people met, and they enjoyed themselves so much after the fashion at the old fair, that before night the fair fever was running high, and, no doubt, had books been opened, stock enough would have been subscribed in a short time to start an agricultural fair at that point, which is decidedly favorably located for the attendance of Boone county people.

B. F. McGlasson, president; George Hafer, secretary, and John J. Rucker, A. G. Fisk, Fred Utz, Scott Walton, J. H. Walton, Geo. Utz and Charles Craven, members of the society, we noticed, were very active in their efforts to have every thing done which was calculated to add to the attractiveness of the occasion and the enjoyment and comfort of all in attendance, and they succeeded to the entire satisfaction of all, and observed closely what improvements and additions to the arrangements of their grounds a large attendance demanded, and the next Harvest Home Picnic will find the suggestions given by Saturday's meeting carried out to the letter.

Among those present were Hon. Reuben Conner and wife, Hon. James H. Walton and wife, Hon. N. S. Walton and wife; James D. Campbell and wife, and Mrs. S. W. Carpenter, of Delhi, O. and her aunt Mrs. Simeon Clore, of Waveland, Indiana; Mrs. G. K. Dulany and daughter, Mrs. Rose Tupman and daughters, Frances Kreylich, wife and daughter, Misses Nancy and Gertrude Cleveland and Mrs. Birdie Allen, of Kenton county, and Boone county en masse.

NOTES.

The music was splendid.

Florence sent three bus loads.

Late in the afternoon the dust was flying thick.

No rowdyism was displayed by any one during the day.

The platform is commodious but it was densely crowded all day.

I. Flick was there with his melon wagon, to the delight of the small boy.

Commissioner Cropper presented his claim for a premium on grapes, and it was allowed.

To G. G. Hughes we return thanks for a basket of smashing big potatoes which were exhibited.

The roots that were so numerous, as to trip the young men, got many a don't-you-do-that-again-look.

Lost—At the Harvest Home Picnic, last Saturday, black silk parasol—finder will please return to this office.

Dudley Rouse was so anxious to get to the grounds that he forgot to provide himself with the price of admission.

Mrs. Annie E. Graves, of Florence, remembered the RECORDER with a basket of delicious grapes of the Catawba variety.

Some of the ladies were not in as good humor when they went home as when they came up—blue ribbon. Some of the men ditto!

The blue ribbon was tied on a calico quilt on which there was no number. If the owner of that quilt will apply to Dudley Rouse, at Burlington, or J. J. Rucker, at Hebron, the premium will be paid.

James L. Riley, who owns the Bullittsville grist-mill, had on exhibition half bushel of the most beautiful meal we ever saw, but the judges gave another the premium on some technicality. Jim presented the RECORDER with the meal and we know it is good.

Mrs. T. L. Swetnam, of Florence, as she has always done, captured the premium on fruit cake. She has a recipe for making fruit cake which cannot be excelled. She also took the premium on light bread. The RECORDER is under obligations to Mrs. Swetnam for a portion of the premium cake and a bottle of sparkling wine.

NOTICE—The Annual election of officers for the Boone County Farmers Insurance Company, will be held in the company's office in Burlington on the first Monday in October, 1886. All the stockholders are earnestly requested to attend. J. H. WALTON, Secty.

NOTICE.—As some persons have seen fit to circulate scandalous stories about how I should have acted in the past, and which are calculated to lower me in the estimation of decent people, and also cast shame on my children, I take this public method of denying such reports and defy any one to come to me and say such stories are true, and I will try the courts for justice.

1t J. K. LATHAM.

Although Jo Revill has an old shotgun with 18 loads of buck-shot, a few nights ago some fiend who has no fear of Jo, the gun nor the devil, invaded Jo's meat-house and carried away the only side of meat in the house, since which time, he has bought a combination pad-lock and put on the door, and while passing his house Sunday afternoon we noticed lumps of coal laying on the fence, and we have learned since that they are loaded with dynamite. Jo says they wont get any more meat at his house, as he will not keep so much on hand hereafter.

Very little business disposed of in the county court Monday. The big contest was over Mrs. A. E. Demolsey's application for a license to sell whisky as a druggist. There was a strong opposition to the application, and the fight consumed the entire forenoon. The evidence was all in and the arguments of counsel made, when the judge continued the application to next term, when Judge Baker will take a tilt at it. —D. G. Rice's will was probated with S. D. Rice executor.—Codiell to Duly Master's will probated.—Lucy Clore's will produced in court and summons ordered to issue.

E. H. Baker presented commission and bond and took his seat as county judge.

The hall is all that can be desired, located in the suburbs of the city, and hence free from all the vices so common to large towns. Meals promptly on time, doors closed and lights down out at half past seven. Temp Graves, proprietor; Jack Green, chief cook and bottle washer; Alonzo Vaughn, clerk; Jim Riley, Will Watts and Al Franks, boarders at present, and Billy O. Kirtley, of the Ohio, has engaged a room.

Yesterday afternoon about the time Old Sol was warming things up to the very best of his ability, a couple of pedestrians on matrimony bent struck the town. It happened that deputy clerk Dudley Rouse was in charge of the license department at the time, and sizing up the couple he concluded that the best thing to do in the premises was to refuse the license, so down he 'sot' his iron heel, and refused to issue the "documents." The disappointed couple "jined" hands and struck out towards Florence.

Col. Frank Grant and Captain Norris, of Petersburg, are certain that they own a race horse in Grafton, and the country generally entertain the same opinion. Grafton trotted his mile at Latonia on last Thursday in 2:30, the best of time ever made on the track, and made the third mile in 2:22. He was not in condition by [illegible], and the work came very near using him up. Tom Dickerson, as good a driver as ever held the ribbons over a horse, piloted Grafton. THE COMBINATION
FENCE.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in stock horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was adopted as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged [illegible] in the world to be the most certain remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms. [illegible] are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. [illegible] Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. [illegible] The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

LUCINY'S ROSES.

Why William Havers Did Not Cut Them Down.

The cottage house had been painted white, but the paint was now only a film in some places. One could see the gray wood through it. The establishment had a generally declining look; the shingles were scaling from the roof, the fences were leaning. All the bit of newness and smartness about it was the front door. That was painted a bright blue. Cinnamon rose bushes grew in the square front yard. They were full of their little sweet ragged roses now. With their silent, lowly persistency they had overrun the whole yard. There was no stepping room between them. They formed a green bank against the house walls; their branches reached droopingly across the front walk, and pushed through the fence. Children on the sidewalk could pick the roses. Four men coming up the street with a business air looked hesitatingly at this rose-crowded front yard when they neared it.

"Thar ain't no use goin' in thar into that mess of prickly roses," said one—a large man with a happy smile and swagger.

"We are obliged by law to have the sale on the premises," remarked another, blandly and authoritatively. He was a light-whiskered young fellow, who wore better clothes than the others, and held a large roll of papers ostentatiously.

"Come round to the side of the house, then," spoke another, with low gruffness. He was a man of fifty. He had a lean, sinewy figure, and a severe, sharp-featured face. His skin was dark reddish-brown from exposure to the sun.

So the four filed around into the side yard, with its short grass and its well and well-sweep. Here a red flag was blowing, fastened to a cherry-tree. The men stood together in close consultation, the light-whiskered young man, who was a lawyer, being chief spokesman.

"We may as well begin," he said, finally, standing off from the others. "The hour has passed; no one else is likely to come."

Then they took their places with a show of ceremony—the large man, who now held the roll of papers, a little aloof, the lawyer, and the fourth man, who was old, and had a stupid, anxious face, at one side, and the man with the severe red face, leaning carelessly against the cherry-tree. The large man began to read in a loud voice. As he did so, a loud wail came from the house. He stopped reading, and all turned their faces toward it.

"Oh dear!" they heard distinctly, in a shrill, weak, womanish voice, with an unnatural strain on it—"oh dear! oh dear me! Dear me! dear me! dear me!" Then followed loud hysterical sobs; then the voice kept on: "Oh, father, what made you leave me?—what made you die an' leave me? I wa'n't fit to be left alone. Oh, father! oh, mother! oh, Luciny! I ain't got anybody—I ain't, not anybody. Oh dear! oh dear me! dear me!"

"I heard she took on awfully 'bout it," said the auctioneer.

"Well, you might as well go on," said the lawyer; "duty has to be performed, no matter how unpleasant."

"That's so," assented the auctioneer. Then he proceeded, trying to drown out these distressing cries with his powerful utterance. But the cries rang through and above it always. He kept on smilingly; it was the lawyer who grew impatient.

"Gracious sakes," cried he, "can't something be done to stop that woman? Why didn't somebody take her away?"

"I guess her brother's wife is in thar with her; I thought I see her at the window a minute ago," said the auctioneer, coming down from his high hill of declamation.

"Well, go on quickly, and have done with it," said the lawyer. "This is awful."

The man at the cherry-tree kept clinching his hands, but he said nothing. The auctioneer resumed his reading of the long statement of the conditions of the sale, then the bidding began. That was soon over, since there were only two bidders. The old man, who held the mortgage, which had been foreclosed, bid with nervous promptness the exact amount of his claim. Then the man at the cherry-tree made a bid of a few dollars more, and he was pronounced the purchaser.

"Going, going—gone!" said the auctioneer, "to William Havers."

William Havers lingered about his new estate until the others had departed, which they did as soon as the necessary arrangements were completed. They wanted to be out of hearing of those sad cries and complaints. Havers strolled out to the road then. When he saw them fairly started, he went swiftly back to the house, to the side door.

He knocked cautiously. Directly the cries broke out louder and shriller. "They've come to order me out. Oh dear! oh dear! dear! dear! They've come to order me out—they hev, they hev!"

Steps approached the door swiftly; it opened and a woman appeared. She looked pale and troubled, but she was not the one in such bitter distress, for the cries still sounded from the interior of the house.

"How do you do, Mr. Havers?" said the woman, with grave formality.

"Can I see her a minute?" he asked, hoarsely.

"Elsie? I don' know. She's takin' on dreadfully. She ain't fit to see any body. I'm afraid she wouldn't."

"If she'd only see me a minute. I've got something I want to say particular."

"Well, I'll see."

She disappeared, and directly the voice, which had been a little more subdued, waxed louder.

"No, I won't see him; I won't; I can't. I won't see anybody. I never want to see anybody again as long as I live. Oh dear! dear!"

"It ain't any use," said the woman, coming back. "She ain't fit to see anybody; she's 'most crazy. She don't know what she's sayin', anyhow."

"Then you tell her—you go right in an' tell her now—she kin stay here. It don't make any odds about my buyin' the place; I won't live here. She kin keep right on stayin' here just the same."

A door opened suddenly, and another woman appeared. She was a pitiful sight. She had a little slim, bony figure which seemed to tremble in every joint. Every line in her small face wavered and quivered; her blue eyes were watery and bloodshot; her skin all blotched and stained with tears. She was so disfigured by grief that it was impossible to judge of her natural appearance. She would have been hideous had not her smallness and frailty in her distress made her piteous. Now, however, something besides sorrow seemed to move her. She was all alive with a strange impotent wrath, which was directed against William Havers. She clinched her red, bony hands; her poor eyes flashed with indignation, though the force of it was lost through their tearful weakness.

"I guess I won't keep on stayin' here," she snapped, in her thin, hoarse voice. "I guess I won't. You needn't offer me a home. I've got one pervided. I ain't quite destitute yet. You needn't think you're goin' to come round now an' smooth matters over; I know why you've done it. You can't blind me. You've been watchin' all the time for a chance to pay us back."

"I don't know what she means," said Havers, helplessly, to the other woman.

[illegible]

"It's a good deal better for me to have them [illegible]," said Havers, with a troubled look. "I shall let her keep right on here. I [illegible] the [illegible], I bought the place [illegible]."

"I'm [illegible] good man," said Mrs. Wing, [illegible]. She was Elsie Mills' [illegible] wife. "She'll be ashamed of herself [illegible]. But she's comin' to live with Silas an' me. She's welcome to a home with us just as long as she lives. She ain't fit to live alone, anyway. We knew when her father died that she'd run the place all to [illegible] in no time. Well, she's takin' on [illegible]. I shall have to go in. I don't like to leave her a minute. Don't you mind anything she said."

Contrary to Mrs. Wing's expectations, Elsie Mills was not disposed to resent her words. The next day, when she was peacefully domiciled in her brother's house and seemed a little calmer, her sister-in-law opened on the subject.

"What in creation made you talk so to William Havers last night," said she. "Not one man in a hundred would have made you the offer that he did after he'd bought a place."

Elsie fired up at once. "I guess I know why," said she. "Luciny gave him the mitten once—that's why. He's doin' it to show out."

"Why, Elsie Mills, are you in your right mind?"

"Yes, I am. He acted awful cut up. He never got over it. He always meant to pay us back. Now he's bought the place an' invited me to live on him, he'll feel better."

"Well, I never!"

Mrs. Wing repeated the conversation to her husband, and told him that she was really scared about Elsie; she did not act with any reason.

Silas Wing laughed. "Don't you worry, Maria," said he. "Elsie always had that notion. I never really believed that Luciny give Havers the mitten myself, but she did, an' she always went on the notion that he was dreadfully upset over it. Elsie's queer. She's mighty meek an' yieldin' generally; she seems to be kinder goin' sideways at things fur the most part; but if she ever does git p'inted straight at any thing, thar ain't no turnin' her."

"Do you remember any thing about William Havers waitin' on Luciny?"

"Yes. He was round some two years before she died. I didn't think much about it. Luciny was always havin' beaux. An' no wonder; thar wa'n't many girls like her. I kin see her now, jest how she used to look. Poor Elsie wa'n't much beside her, but I don't believe she ever give that a thought. She thought Luciny was beautiful, an' thar we'n't any thing too good fur her. She'd slave herself 'most to death to save her. No; don't you worry, Maria. Elsie's always run on that notion."

Silas Wing was Elsie Mills' half-brother; the dead Lucina had been her own sister. The house which had just been sold was her inheritance from her father. Silas Wing was an easy, prosperous man, with a shrewd streak in his character. His sister's property was sadly deteriorated, and a poor investment. He had no idea of sinking money to secure it for her, but he was perfectly willing to provide for her, and gave her a most cordial invitation to his home. He gave her a front chamber in his large square white house, and furnished it with her own things, to make it seem like home.

"Thar ain't any reason why Elsie shouldn't be as happy as a queen here as long as she lives," he told his wife. "Thar ain't many women fare any better. She ain't much over forty. She'd hev to work hard if she was in some places, an' she ain't fit to. Now she'll jest hev to help you round a little, an' live jest as comfortable as can be."

Elsie's chamber commanded a good view of her old home, which was on the opposite side of the street, a little further down. She could see the yard full of cinnamon roses, and the blue front door, which stood out bravely. That blue door was due to her; she had painted it herself. Silas had some blue paint left after painting his farm wagon, and she had begged it. Then she had stood on a chair—a small, lean figure in clinging calico—and plastered the brilliant blue thickly over the front door, wielding the brush stiffly in her little knotty hand, stretching herself up on her slight, long limbs.

She had always viewed the effect with innocent delight. The unusualness of a blue front door did not trouble her. She was as crude and original as a child in her tastes. It looked bright and fresh in itself, and to her thinking relieved the worn look of the house. She would have painted farther had her paint lasted. After the door was painted blue, she had held up her head better under a neighbor's insinuation that the house was "run down." That, indeed, had led her to do it.

Now she sat forlornly at her chamber window, her elbows on the sill, her sharp chin in her hands, for many an hour, staring over at the blue door and the cinnamon roses, as she might have stared at lost jewels. Nothing about the place seemed so distinctly her own as that blue door; nothing seemed so dear as those cinnamon roses, because her dead sister Lucina had planted them. It is sad work looking at things that were once one's own, when they have not been given away for love, and one still wants them. Elsie was meekly unhappy over it. She was no longer violent and openly despairing, as she had been at first. That had been very unusual with her. She was fond of her brother and his wife, and conformed gently to all the requirements of her new life. She had very little enduring resistance to circumstances in her; she did not kick against the pricks. Still she lay close to them, and was tender enough to be cruelly stung by them. She grew old, and her friends noticed it.

"It ain't any use," Mrs. Wing told her husband: "Elsie ain't never goin' to be the same as she was before she lost her house. She's grown ten years older in a week."

"She's a silly girl; that's all I've got to say," replied Silas Wing.

One evening Elsie, at her open chamber window, overheard a conversation between her brother and his wife. They were sitting on the doorstep.

"Havers came over to-night," said Silas. "I see him out at the gate as I come along. He's goin' to let his other house and live here, he says. I declare I'd hardly think he'd want to, this is so much further from town. But the other'll let better, I s'pose. Reckon that's the reason."

"Is he goin' to fix this one up?" asked Mrs. Wing.

"Yes; he's goin' to paint it up some, an' hev the roof shingled. He was kinder laughin' about that blue door, but he didn't seem to think he'd hev it altered afterward. I told him how poor Elsie painted it herself."

"Lord! I shouldn't think he'd want to keep that blue door."

"He seemed to think it wouldn't look bad if the house was painted new to go with it. He's goin' to cut down all them cinnamon roses in the front yard to-morrow. He's brought over his sickle to-night."

That was all Elsie heard. She did not know how long they talked after that. He was going to cut down Lucina's cinnamon roses! She kept saying it over to herself, as if it were a task she had to learn, and she could not easily understand. "Lucina's cinnamon roses! He's goin' to cut down all Lucina's cinnamon roses to-morrow!"

It was twelve o'clock that night when Elsie crept down the stairs and out the front door. There was no sound in the house except her brother's heavy breathing. He and his wife had been asleep three hours. Elsie sidled out of the yard, keeping on the grass, then sped across the road and down it a little way to her old home. There were only these two houses for a long way; there was not a light visible in either. No one would be passing at this time of the night; there was no danger of her being observed; moreover, she could not have been very easily. Great elms grew on both sides of the street, and they cast broad, flickering shadows. Elsie, keeping close with the shadows, as if they were friends, and progressing with soft starts, after little pauses to listen and peer, might have passed for a shadow herself.

She stopped for a minute at the corner of the yard, and stared fearfully over at the periled roses. The moon was coming up, and she could see them distinctly. She fell to remembering. To this innocent, simple-hearted creature, clinging so closely to the old holy loves and loyalties that she meditated what to her was a des[illegible]

[illegible]

"The queerest thing," he said, when he returned, "Havers has lost his sickle. It was he brought over last night, an' he wants to [illegible], an' I can't find that high or low. I would be 'aware it was hangin' in the barn. He wants to get them cinnamon roses cut."

"Well, I should think it was queer," said his wife. "I know I saw it out there yesterday. Are you sure it's gone?"

"Sure as I am. Don't you s'pose I've got eyes?"

Elsie said nothing. She bent her head over her plate and tried to eat. They did not notice her while she was. She kept a sharp watch all day; she started every time any one spoke; she kept close to the others; she dreaded to hear what might be said, but she dreaded more not to hear.

"Has Mr. Havers found his sickle yet?" Mrs. Wing asked, when her husband came home at night. He had been over to the village. "I see you ridin' home with him."

"No, he ain't. He's gone and bought a new one. Says he's bound to hev them roses cut down to-morrow. Ain't seen any thing of ourn yet, hev you?"

"No; I've been out myself and looked."

"Well, it beats every thing—two sickles right in the neighborhood! I rather think some one must ha' took 'em."

"Land! Silas, nobody's took 'em. I know all about you. I've known you to hev things stole before, an' it always turned out you was the thief. When you lose a thing it's always stole."

Elsie found it harder to start out to-night; a little of the first impetus was wasted. Still, she did not hesitate. When the house was quiet she crept out again, and went over to the old place. She did not stop to reflect over the roses to-night. She was braced up to do her errand; but it must be done quickly, or she would give way. She went straight around the house to the woodshed, where she had found the sickle the night before. As she came close to the open arch which served as entrance there was a swift rush, and William Havers stood beside her holding her hand.

"Oh!" she said, then began feebly gasping for breath.

"Elsie Mills? what in the world are you doin' here?"

She looked up in his face, but did not speak.

"Why, Elsie, what is it! Don't you be afraid, your poor little thing. What was it you wanted? Tell me."

"Let me go!"

"Of course, I will, but I think you'd better tell me what you wanted, an' let me get it. I'd be glad enough to. I didn't mean to scare you. I suspected I'd had a sickle stole, an' I was kinder keepin' a lookout. When I jumped out I didn't see who 'twas."

"I stole your sickle, and I'll steal it again if you offer to tech Luciny's roses."

"You—stole my sickle—I offer to tech Luciny's roses! I guess I don't know what you mean, Elsie."

"I mean jest what I say. I'll steal your sickle every time you offer to cut down Luciny's roses."

"You mean them roses out in the front yard?"

"Course I do. Didn't she set 'em out?"

"Dear me! I didn't know. I didn't know nothin' about it. I hadn't no notion of your feelin' bad. If I had, I guess—Why didn't you tell me? Why didn't you come right over? I'd hev mown off my own fingers before I'd offered to tech them roses if I'd known."

"Do you s'pose I was goin' to come over here an' ask you not to, when I knew you was jest doin' it for spite 'cause Luciny wouldn't hev you?"

"'Cause Luciny wouldn't hev me!"

"Yes, 'cause Luciny wouldn't hev you."

"I didn't never ask her to hev me, Elsie."

"What?"

"I didn't never ask her."

"I don't see what you mean by that."

"Why, I mean I didn't."

"What was you hangin' round her so fur, then? An' what made you act so awful cut up?"

"Didn't you never know 'twas you, Elsie?"

"Me?"

"Yes, you."

"Well, all I've got to say is, you'd orter to be ashamed of yourself. A girl like Luciny—you wa'n't fit to look at her. I guess there wa'n't many fellers round but would ruther hev hed her than anybody else. I guess it's sour grapes."

"I know Luciny was the handsomest girl anywheres round, but that didn't make no difference. I always liked you best. I don't think you'd orter to be mad, Elsie."

"I ain't; but I don't like to see anybody like Luciny slighted. I wa'n't nothin' aside of Luciny."

"Well, I reckon your thinkin' you wa'n't was what made me take to you in the first place. Look a-here, Elsie. I'm a-goin' to tell you. I've been wantin' to, but I didn't know but I'd die before I got a chance. I came over an' bought this place jest on your account when I heard the mortgage was goin' to be foreclosed. I didn't reely s'pose you'd be willin' to marry me, you treated me so indifferent in Luciny's day; but I didn't pay no attention to that. I wanted you to keep on livin' here. When you acted so mad 'cause I spoke about it, I didn't dare to say any thing more. But I wish you'd come now. Won't you? I'll go back to my old home; 'twont put me out a mite. An' I shan't do it because I've got any spite, nor want to show it out. It 'll be because I've always liked you better'n anybody else, an' wanted to do something fur you."

Elsie was crying; "I've got to get use to thinkin' of it," she sobbed.

"Well, you think it over, an' you come back here. It's your home, where you've always lived, an' I know you'll be happier, no matter how much your brother's folks do fur you. You make up your mind an' come back. I'll hev the house painted, an' it'll look real pretty with the blue door; an' I won't hev a single one of them cinnamon roses cut down, if I find out that their roots are tangled up in a gold mine."

"No; I shan't let you give me the house fur nothin'; I shan't, William."

"Now, Elsie, thar ain't no reason in your feelin' so. When anybody gets to thinkin' a good deal of anybody else, why it don't make so much difference about yourself; the other one stands first. If you kin see the other one happy, you don't know any difference betwixt that an' bein' happy yourself, an' if you kin only do something to make the other one happy, why, it comes before any thing else. That's jest the way I feel. I've got eddicated up to it. So don't you worry about takin' the house fur nothing. You ain't. Now you'll git cold standin' here. I'm goin' to see you safe to your brother's, an' you think it over."

Her little nervous hand clutched at his coat sleeve to detain him.

"Look-a here a minute. I want to tell you. I ain't never had any thing like this to say before, an' I don't know how. When I got to thinkin' about any thing of this kind, I always put Luciny in instead of me. But I want to tell you—I'm all took by surprise, an' I don't know—but mebbe, if I could get used to thinkin' of it, I—could—"

"I guess I don't know what you mean, Elsie."

"Well, it don't seem as if thar would be much sense in my gittin' married now, anyway."

Elsie Mills and William Havers were married at the bride's brother's. When the bridal couple went to their own home, they did not enter at the front door. They passed around to the side one, because the front yard was so full of cinnamon roses.

—On the ground between the railroad tracks near the Pennsylvania coal shed below the station at Harrisburg, a whip-poorwill has built a nest and reared her brood. Cars and engines pass within a foot of the nest almost every minute of the day, yet she was not the least frightened. The other day a well-known engineer, whose engine was taking coal, saw the mother bird and the nest, in the latter an egg. When he returned in the evening the egg was gone and in its place a little bird, the mother of which fed it, while a number of people watched the process. The kind-hearted railroaders watch the nest, and when the young birds fly on the track they put them back again.—Pittsburgh Post.

OUR FASHION LETTER.

The Recent Changes in Styles of Ladies' Garments—Elegant Simplicity of Street Costumes—Fashionable Jackets—The French Polonaise, Leg O' Mutton Sleeves, Etc., Etc.

[Special Correspondence.]

New York, September [illegible]. [illegible] and much more will be accomplished in the way of fine effects in fitting and draping. Stripes, plaids, checks and other fabrics [illegible] combined with [illegible] vogue, yet while this is the base it will not by any means follow that handsome costumes of a single color will not prevail. Instead, many elegant gowns will be made entirely of either plain or figured fabrics, according to fancy, and yet the latter of the two be equally fulfilled in fashion's domain. One of the fashionable jackets for these natty suits shows a model, fitting the figure trimly in the back, with the shortest kind of a Tailor Costume of Turtle Colored Cloth.

POSTILION AS A FINISH.

In front it opens all the way down over a double-breasted waistcoat of plain cloth or ecru pique, this fastened up half its length with costly buttons, set on in a double row. Down each side of the front are long, narrow revers, these usually of velvet, and trimmed with enameled ornaments, or those matched to the buttons on the vest. The sleeve is close and small, with a narrow cuff of velvet at the edge, held with an ornament like those on the jacket. Other jackets, in English style, are made double-breasted themselves, the vest showing only at the top, and graceful shapes are brought out, cut short in front like a Russian jacket, with long Directoire coat-backs, which fall more than a quarter of a yard over the drapery of the skirt in the back.

THE FRENCH POLONAISE,

which revolved out of sight for two seasons, has come up smiling, and appears in novel and graceful arrangements, which quite transform its rather wooden effect of other days. A celebrated New York designer sends out with his latest fashion journal a number of new devices in polonaises, this inspiration being drawn directly from Parisian models. The skirt of one long, ample polonaise is slashed its entire length, thus dividing it into sections which are really panels. Bows of velvet ribbon, in clusters of three, set some inches from the next three above, are arranged across the bottom of each panel, making nine rows in all. The polonaise is open all the way down the front, therefore there are panels each side of the underskirt, which is partly covered by a bow and long ends of satin ribbon, which come from under an opening in the corsage of the polonaise, tie, and fall nearly to the front of the underskirt.

Walking Costume of Plain and Striped woolen Goods and Velvet.

KILTS, PANELS,

plain and plaited box plaits and plain round effects, wholly unplaited, are all noted on the very latest costumes from over the sea. Reversof velvet, or of goods contrasting with those which form the gown, are set upon both skirt and bodice, and beaded ornaments, lace, silk gimp trimmings and fancy braids are as much the fashion this moment as if they had just appeared upon the scene. Demi-season mantles show numberless new shapes, but the visite for the older wearers and the English open coat for the younger people are the two most popular autumn styles as yet introduced. Ribbon trimmings of all sorts, from velvet with Picot-edge, to plain satin, plays an important role as a dress garniture, and flowers of shaded velvet, in magnificent autumnal colorings, will strongly rival long plumes and fluffy short tips as adornings for my lady's picturesque Gainsborough hat for fall wear.

Walking Costume of Plain Homespun and Plaid.

THE LEG O' MUTTON SLEEVE

is contesting for high rank in autumn modes, and has already been recognized by French attieres. Elbow sleeves, slashed with puffs of velvet set in; full length sleeves with a deep V insertion of lace, satin or other goods set in to reach from the shoulder to near the elbow, and even puffed sleeves, are all revived, French modistes declaring that a large puffed or leg o' mutton sleeve imparts a slender effect to the waist—ergo, puffed sleeves by the score.

EVOLUTION PREFERRED.

As a woman standing all alone
  I humbly hope to shine;
I'm tired of the dreary twaddle
  Of the oak and ivy vine.
I've seen too many instances
  Where, nature's law declining,
The vine did the supporting,
  While the oak did all the twining.

Before I'd marry a man and work
  For his bread and my own,
Before I'd marry a man who'd place

And claim from me, his better half,

I'd marry the merest ape and wait
  For him to evolute!

Think of This

Many people have neglected slight manifestations of humor in the blood till the foul matter has become so powerful as to cause terrible scrofulous sores, awful suffering, and, finally, as the system becomes drained of all its strength, death.

Some have neglected distress after eating, heartburn, occasional headaches, and other early symptoms of dyspepsia, till this painful disease has become incurable, and the victim barely sustains a miserable existence.

Others neglect that tired feeling, pains in the back, weakness, languor, till general debility and kidney or liver disease becomes firmly fixed upon them and there is no hope of recovery.

Be wise in time: Hood's Sarsaparilla will cure, when in the power of medicine, scrofula, salt rheum, boils, pimples, dyspepsia, headache, biliousness, catarrh, rheumatism, that tired feeling, and any disease or affection caused by impure blood or low state of the system.

Be sure to get "the peculiar medicine."

DR. JOHN BULL'S

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER,

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

INVALIDS' HOTEL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE

No. 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Not a Hospital, but a pleasant Remedial Home, organized with

A FULL STAFF OF EIGHTEEN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS,

And exclusively devoted to the treatment of all Chronic Diseases.

This imposing Establishment was designed and erected to accommodate the large number of invalids who visit Buffalo from every State and Territory, as well as from many foreign lands, that they may avail themselves of the professional services of the Staff of skilled specialists in medicine and surgery that compose the Faculty of this widely-celebrated institution.

A FAIR AND BUSINESS-LIKE OFFER TO INVALIDS.

We earnestly invite you to come, see and examine for yourself, our institutions, appliances, advantages and success in curing chronic diseases. Have a mind of your own. Do not listen to or heed the counsel of skeptical friends or jealous physicians, who know nothing of us, our system of treatment, or means of cure, yet who never lose an opportunity to misrepresent and endeavor to prejudice people against us. We are responsible to you for what we represent, and if you come and visit us, and find that we have misrepresented, in any particular, our institutions, advantages or success, we will promptly refund to you all expenses of your trip. We court honest, sincere investigation, have no secrets, and are only too glad to show all interested and candid people what we are doing for suffering humanity.

NOT ALWAYS NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.

By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases just as successfully without as with a personal consultation. While we are always glad to see our patients, and become acquainted with them, show them our institutions, and familiarize them with our system of treatment, yet we have not seen one person in five hundred whom we have cured. The perfect accuracy with which scientists are enabled to deduce the most minute particulars in their several departments, appears almost miraculous, if we view it in the light of the early ages. Take, for example, the electro-magnetic telegraph, the greatest invention of the age. Is it not a marvelous degree of accuracy which enables an operator to exactly locate a fracture in a submarine cable nearly three thousand miles long? Our venerable "clerk of the weather" has become so thoroughly familiar with the most wayward elements of nature that he can accurately predict their movements. He can sit in Washington and foretell what the weather will be in Florida or New York as well as if several hundred miles did not intervene between him and the places named. And so in all departments of modern science, what is required is the knowledge of certain signs. From these scientists deduce accurate conclusions regardless of distance. So, also, in medical science, diseases have certain unmistakable signs, or symptoms, and by reason of this fact, we have been enabled to originate and perfect a system of determining, with the greatest accuracy, the nature of chronic diseases, without seeing and personally examining our patients. In recognizing diseases without a personal examination of the patient, we claim to possess no miraculous powers. We obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the practical application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. And it is to the accuracy with which this system has endowed us that we owe our almost world-wide reputation of skillfully treating lingering or chronic affections. This system of practice, and the marvelous success which has been attained through it, demonstrate the fact that diseases display certain phenomena, which, being subjected to scientific analysis, furnish abundant and unmistakable data, to guide the judgment of the skillful practitioner aright in determining the nature of diseased conditions. The most ample resources for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of every invalid, however distant he or she may reside from the physicians making the treatment of such affections a specialty. Full particulars of our original, scientific system of examining and treating patients at a distance are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." By R. V. Pierce, M. D. 1000 pages and over 300 colored and other illustrations. Sent, post-paid, for $1.50. Or write and describe your symptoms, inclosing ten cents in stamps, and a complete treatise, on your particular disease, will be sent you, with our terms for treatment and all particulars.

COMMON SENSE AS APPLIED TO MEDICINE.

It is a well-known fact, and one that appeals to the judgment of every thinking person, that the physician who devotes his whole time to the study and investigation of a certain class of diseases, must become better qualified to treat such diseases than he who attempts to treat every ill to which flesh is heir, without giving special attention to any class of diseases. Men, in all ages of the world, who have become famous, have devoted their lives to some special branch of science, art, or literature.

By thorough organization, and subdividing the practice of medicine and surgery in this institution, every invalid is treated by a specialist—one who devotes his undivided attention to the particular class of diseases to which the case belongs. The advantage of this arrangement must be obvious. Medical science offers a vast field for investigation, and no physician can, within the brief limits of a life-time, achieve the highest degree of success in the treatment of every malady incident to humanity.

OUR FIELD OF SUCCESS.

NASAL, THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES.

The treatment of Diseases of the Air Passages and Lungs, such as Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, both through correspondence and at our institutions, constitutes an important specialty.

We publish three separate books on Nasal, Throat and Lung Diseases, which give much valuable information, viz: (1) A Treatise on Consumption, Laryngitis and Bronchitis; price, post-paid, ten cents. (2) A Treatise on Asthma, or Phthisic, giving new and successful treatment; price, post-paid, ten cents. (3) A Treatise on Chronic Nasal Catarrh; price, post-paid, two cents.

DISEASES OF DIGESTION.

Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Obstinate Constipation, Chronic Diarrhea, Tape-worms, and kindred affections are among those chronic diseases in the successful treatment of which our specialists have attained great success. Many of the diseases affecting the liver and other organs contributing to their functions to the process of digestion, are very obscure, and are not infrequently mistaken by both laymen and physicians for other maladies, and treatment is employed directed to the removal of a disease which does not exist. Our Complete Treatise on Diseases of the Digestive Organs will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

KIDNEY DISEASES.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and kindred maladies, have been very largely treated, and cures effected in thousands of cases which had been pronounced beyond hope. These diseases are readily diagnosticated, or determined, by chemical analysis of the urine, without a personal examination of patients, who can, therefore, generally be successfully treated at their homes. The study and practice of chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the urine in our consideration of cases, with reference to correct diagnosis, in which our institution long ago became famous, has naturally led to a very extensive practice in diseases of the urinary organs. Probably no other institution in the world has been so largely patronized by sufferers from this class of maladies as the old and world-famed World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel. Our specialists have acquired, through a vast and varied experience, great expertness in determining the exact nature of each case, and, hence, have been successful in nicely adapting their remedies for the cure of each individual case.

CAUTION.

These delicate diseases should be carefully treated by a specialist thoroughly familiar with them, and who is competent to ascertain the exact condition and stage of advancement which the disease has made (which can only be ascertained by a careful chemical and microscopical examination of the urine), for medicines which are curative in one stage or condition are known to do positive injury in others. We have never, therefore, attempted to put up anything for general sale through druggists, recommending to cure these diseases, although possessing very superior remedies, knowing full well from an extensive experience that the only safe and successful course is to carefully determine the disease and its progress in each case by a chemical and microscopical examination of the urine, and then adapt our medicines to the exact stage of the disease and condition of our patient.

WONDERFUL SUCCESS.

To this wise course of action we attribute the marvelous success attained by our specialists in that important and extensive Department of our institutions devoted exclusively to the treatment of diseases of the kidneys and bladder. The treatment of diseases of the urinary organs having constituted a leading branch of our practice at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, and, being in constant receipt of numerous inquiries for a complete work on the nature and curability of these maladies, written in a style to be easily understood, we have published a large Illustrated Treatise on these diseases, which will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

BLADDER DISEASES.

INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, STONE IN THE BLADDER, Gravel, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Retention of Urine, and kindred affections, may be included among those in the cure of which our specialists have achieved extraordinary success. These are fully treated of in our illustrated pamphlet on Urinary Diseases. Sent by mail for ten cents in stamps.

STRICTURE.

STRICTURES AND URINARY FISTULÆ.—Hundreds of cases of the worst form of strictures, many of them greatly aggravated by the careless use of instruments in the hands of inexperienced physicians and surgeons, causing false passages, urinary fistulæ, and other complications, annually consult us for relief and cure. That no case of this class is too difficult for the skill of our specialists is proved by cures reported in our illustrated treatise on these maladies, to which we refer with pride. To intrust this class of cases to physicians of small experience is a dangerous proceeding. Many a man has been ruined for life by so doing, while thousands annually lose their lives through unskillful treatment. Send particulars of your case and ten cents in stamps for a large, illustrated treatise containing many testimonials.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

Epileptic Convulsions, or Fits, Paralysis, or Palsy, Locomotor Ataxia, St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or inability to sleep, and threatened insanity, Nervous Debility, arising from overstudy, excesses, and other causes, and every variety of nervous affection, are treated by our specialists for these diseases with unusual success. See numerous cases reported in our different illustrated pamphlets on nervous diseases, any one of which will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps, when request for them is accompanied with a statement of a case for consultation, so that we may know which one of our Treatises to send.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.

We have a special Department, thoroughly organized, and devoted exclusively to the treatment of Diseases of Women. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Important cases (and we get few which have not already baffled the skill of all the home physicians) has the benefit of a full Council of skilled specialists. Rooms for ladies in the Invalids' Hotel are very private. Send ten cents in stamps for our large Complete Treatise on Diseases of Women, illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates (160 pages).

RADICAL CURE OF RUPTURE.

HERNIA (Breach), or RUPTURE, no matter of how long standing, or of what size, is promptly and permanently cured by our specialists, without the knife and without dependence upon trusses. Abundant references. Send ten cents for Illustrated Treatise.

PILES, FISTULÆ, and other diseases affecting the lower bowels, are treated with wonderful success. The worst cases of pile tumors are permanently cured in fifteen to twenty days. Send ten cents for Illustrated Treatise.

DELICATE DISEASES.

Organic weakness, nervous debility, premature decline of the manly powers, involuntary vital losses, impaired memory, mental anxiety, absence of will-power, melancholy, weak back, and kindred affections, are speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured.

To those acquainted with our institutions, it is hardly necessary to say that the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, with the branch establishment located at No. 3 New Oxford Street, London, England, have, for many years, enjoyed the distinction of being the most largely patronized and widely celebrated institutions in the world for the treatment and cure of those affections which arise from youthful indiscretions and pernicious, solitary practices.

We, many years ago, established a special Department for the treatment of these diseases, under the management of some of the most skillful physicians and surgeons on our Staff, in order that all who apply to us might receive all the advantages of a full Council of the most experienced specialists.

WE OFFER NO APOLOGY.

We offer no apology for devoting so much attention to this neglected class of diseases, believing no condition of humanity is too wretched to merit the sympathy and best services of the noble profession to which we belong. Many who suffer from these terrible diseases contract them innocently. Why any medical man, intent on doing good and alleviating suffering, should shun such cases, we cannot imagine. Why any one should consider it otherwise than most honorable to cure the worst cases of these diseases, we cannot understand; and yet of all the other maladies which afflict mankind there is probably none about which physicians in general practice know so little.

We shall, therefore, continue, as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration, sympathy, and skill, all applicants who are suffering from any of these delicate diseases.

CURED AT HOME. Most of these cases can be treated by us when at a distance just as well as if they were here in person.

Our Complete and Illustrated Treatise (168 pages) on these subjects is sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

SURGICAL PRACTICE.

Hundreds of the most difficult operations known to modern surgery are annually performed in the most skillful manner, by our Surgeon-specialists. Large Stones are safely removed from the Bladder, by crushing, washing and pumping them out, thus avoiding the great danger of cutting. Our specialists remove cataract from the eye, thereby curing blindness. They also straighten cross-eyes and insert artificial ones when needed. Many Ovarian and also Fibroid Tumors of the Uterus are arrested in growth and cured by electrolysis, coupled with other means of our invention, whereby the great danger of cutting operations in these cases is avoided.

Especially has the success of our improved operations for Varicocele, Hydrocele, Fistulæ, Ruptured Cervix Uteri, and for Ruptured Perineum, been alike gratifying both to ourselves and our patients. Not less so have been the results of numerous operations for Stricture of the Cervical Canal, a condition in the female generally resulting in Barrenness, or Sterility, and the cure of which, by a safe and painless operation, removes this commonest of impediments to the bearing of offspring.

A Complete Treatise on any one of the above maladies will be sent on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES A SPECIALTY.

Although we have in the preceding paragraphs, made mention of some of the special ailments to which particular attention is given by the specialists at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, yet the institution abounds in skill, facilities, and apparatus for the successful treatment of every form of chronic ailment, whether requiring for its cure medical or surgical means.

CAUGHT IN A MINE.

A Cave-In of Several Acres in a Pennsylvania Colliery.

Whereby Several Men Are Imprisoned, Whose Fate is Uncertain.

Scranton, Pa., Sept. 13.—The Marvine shaft colliery of the Delaware and Hudson Canal company was the scene of an extensive cave-in this morning, by which, it is feared, a number of men have lost their lives, how many it is impossible to say, the suppositions varying from six to nine. There seems to be but little question of the death of one of them, an elderly man named John Shafer. Following are the names of the injured: Henry Shafer, Thomas Healy, laborer; Joseph Brady, driver; George Mason, miner; Peter Kelly (miner boss) was struck on the back of the head and on the shoulder by a falling rock. Kelly passed Joe Shafer, an elderly man, at the foot of the slope. He thinks the rock which struck him struck Shafer also. There are a number of other workmen in the shaft, whose fate is not known. The main road and the straight road, as they are called, are both blocked, and entrance through them is as yet impossible. There is a possibility of effecting an entrance to the workings in the rear of the fall by means of a heading, which runs clear around the twenty-five feet of the chamber, and men are at work and will continue without cessation until an entrance is effected. By working three shafts, and spelling the men every three hours, it is hoped to drill a hole through this twenty-five feet of coal by some time to-morrow, when, by getting in the rear of the fall, if the missing men are alive, they will almost certainly be found. The chances of a rescue are very slim.

—Every city, village and country town should be liberally supplied with drinking fountains for animals, and they should be so constructed that even the smallest dogs can drink from them. UNHAPPY LABRADOR.

Seventy Thousand People Rendered Destitute by the Failure of the Fisheries.

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 13.—Alfred B. Morine, member of the New Foundland Legislature for Bonavista, now here, says: "The Labrador fisheries are an entire failure. At their best they can afford but a bare subsistence. Thirty thousand people go from New Foundland to Labrador for fish every year. This year they have not caught enough to pay the cost of transportation and supplies. At least [illegible] more people are dependent upon the success of the above mentioned [illegible]. The total failure of the shore fisheries this year renders [illegible] people destitute only [illegible] of those depending upon them being prepared to stand the loss of a year's labor. The people have barely enough for present necessities, and no means of earning a dollar. The only relief to this picture is the fact that the potato crop, the only crop raised on the island, is turning out well, and will yield about a peck per head of population." Mr. Morine says: "This seems highly colored in view of the recent fabrications of starvation stories among the Labrador Esquimaux, but is the plain English of actual facts and inevitable consequences."

The little one awoke and climbed out of the front window to the balcony. Then getting upon the iron railing the child lost his balance and fell to the stone pavement in front of the parlor windows, a distance of over thirty feet. A gentleman passing at the time saw the accident and alarmed the house. The child was taken in and the doctors summoned. They could find no injuries beyond a few scratches on the lower limbs. The escape was most miraculous, as the lower balcony is only about three feet wide, and the child could not have missed the iron railing more than an inch.

ROMANCE OF THE WAR,

The End of Which is Arrest for Embezzlement.

Stolen Treasure Buried Near New Orleans After Three Weeks of Digging the Soldier Who Says he Buried it is Arrested for Deception.

New Orleans, La., Sept. 10.—Dr. George J. Adams, of Massachusetts, was arrested here to-day charged with embezzlement by a number of persons whom he defrauded out of money to search for a hidden treasure. Adams claims to have been a practicing physician in Massachusetts when the war broke out. He shouldered a musket and joined Company A, Seventeenth Massachusetts Volunteers. A portion of the command came with Butler to New Orleans. In a foraging expedition three soldiers of the regiment entered a dwelling on the Magnolia plantation, twenty miles above New Orleans, on the right bank of the river, and carried off some $[illegible] in gold and silver, $1,[illegible] of it in silver half dollars, $1,000 in dollars, and the remainder in gold. Being afraid to enter the city with so much money, on reaching a pecan grove about half a mile from the locks at the canal opposite Greenville, they selected a tree, prominent for its size and some peculiarities about its appearance which made it conspicuous. At the foot of this tree they buried the money and then took bearings, one of the party being a civil engineer. Each of the three men were furnished with a copy of this, and the marauders returned to New Orleans, intending to return after the war and recover the money. His two companions were killed and Adams was desperately wounded soon after. Adams was taken to a Northern hospital, and left it paralyzed and helpless. When he recovered the use of his limbs, only a month ago, he returned to New Orleans and at once began to search for his treasure. He found to his dismay that all the old pecan trees had been cut down and only the young ones left, and was consequently unable to recognize the tree under which the treasure was buried. He devoted himself, however, for three weeks to delving for it. A few days ago he took several other parties into partnership with him, who advanced a better outfit for surveying the land and digging for the money; but as he has unearthed no treasure his partners had him arrested to-day.

Ehms was placed under $1,000 bail as a witness. A warrant has been issued for Gardner's arrest. Mysterious Poisoning.

Decatur, Ill., Sept 10.—About fifty people were mysteriously poisoned at a country wedding about five miles west of here Wednesday night, and yesterday all the available physicians were hard at work attending the afflicted persons, who are retching and vomiting violently. Thomas W. Jacobs and Miss Alice Glasgow were married at the house of the bride's father. Supper was served, and included chicken salad and boiled chicken, and all ate heartily. An hour later the bride and groom were taken sick, manifesting symptoms of having been poisoned. Part of the company had left, but those remaining were taken sick, doubling up and vomiting. It has been learned that the chickens for the salad were cooked and salted in a big copper kettle. It is supposed the salt caused the metal to corrode and mix with the chicken. The people are all quite sick yet, but the doctors do not apprehend the fatal termination of any of the cases.

SEEKING THE SOUTH POLE.

A Scientific Britisher Who Wants an Expedition to Start at Once.

London, Sept. 9.—Mr. Murray, speaking before the British Association, advocated a large scheme for Antartic exploration. He said that if the Australian Governments would be induced to vote [illegible] each and Parliament [illegible] towards the outfit of an Antartic expedition the success of the undertaking would be assured. The colonies might follow the example of Australia, and this would be the first great step in imperial federation. Mr. Murray then went on to give an account of the Antartic circle, which he said might be said to be covered with a white shroud of snow and ice, which had hitherto prevented any detailed examination of either the solid land or the ocean waters. Five expeditions, said Mr. Murray, had been dispatched from England and other countries to explore the Antartic Continent, but only that of Sir James Ross had been especially fitted for the work, and only he and Wilkes had got within the Antartic circle, and Ross has expressed the opinion that had it been possible to find a place of security upon the coast for the wintering, the interior might have been explored with sleds and the Southern Pole reached. The Antartic land had a great interest to us from the scientific questions connected with the ice-cap and iceberg. The ice cap in the Southern Hemisphere might be several miles in thickness near the pole, and it was in connection with this that some of the most interesting scientific investigations were required to be made.

Miscellaneous Items.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy tobaccos have suffered a more real decline and we lower quotations [illegible] for all grades from trash up to medium leaf, both extremes included. Green [illegible] half dried leaf has depressed because the peculiar condition was not suited either to the English or domestic demand. Good and fair grades of both leading types have been scarce and firm. The cool, dry, breezy weather which has followed the damp, hot forcing weather of the preceding four or five weeks has been exactly suited to the wants of the plants at the stage of ripening and weighting, and has also favored the cutting, which is in progress in some sections. A very leafy crop is expected, and also a crop of considerably larger size than had been anticipated earlier. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows, for full weight packages.

Dr. Foote, of Meade County, was thrown from his buggy and his head struck a rock with such force that death resulted.

Former pupils of the late Prof. J. W. Dodd, LL. D., resident of Shelbyville, have issued a call to all of his pupils to attend a meeting to be held at Shelbyville, Monday, October 4, for the purpose of providing a fund for the erection of a monument to the memory of that distinguished educator.

The war in Perry County is over, and peace and quietness reigns supreme.

In Owingsville there were 123 indictments found by the grand jury, principally for carrying concealed weapons and selling liquor contrary to law.

Willie Wentz, of Louisville, was terribly lacerated by a large dog. The child's left eye was entirely destroyed.

The New York Sun says: "The Tenth District of Kentucky, lying in the eastern part of the State, and represented in Congress by the Hon. William P. Taulbee, is remarkable for the homogeneous character of its population. It consists of twenty counties, with an aggregate population at the last census of about 152,000. In all of the twenty counties there are only thirty-four men, women and children of foreign birth. Most of these live in the towns of Winchester and Mt. Sterling. In sixteen counties, with a population of 105,656, there are only sixty-one foreign-born people. In ten counties, with a population of 75,986, there are only fifteen foreign-born. In five counties out of 30,305 people there are only three whose nativity is not American. Bell, Breathitt, Letcher, Magoffin, Perry and Wolfe Counties have each only one foreign-born resident; Leslie and Harlan Counties have none."

Two saloons were opened in Brownsville, a few days ago. The last County Judge refused to issue licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in Edmonson County, and all the saloons have been closed for several years. At the last August election the question of "license or no license" was in issue, and the license ticket won. The first official act of the new Judge, who was installed recently, was the granting of license for these two saloons in Brownsville.

A large tobacco barn belonging to Wesley Vicroy, near Maysville, was entirely destroyed by fire a few days ago, supposed to be of incendiary origin.

According to the official record, there are 5,892 pensioners residing in this State, who receive the sum of $78,441.04 monthly.

A farmer named George Rogers, who resides on the Cane Run road, near Louisville, while sliding down the side of a haystack, a few days since, met with a horrible accident by coming in contact with the prongs of a pitchfork. His leg was mangled terribly, and recent reports are that mortification has set in, and that the wound will probably result fatally.

Reports from various sections received by a Louisville tobacco warehouse show that the prospects are good for an unusually large crop. The acreage planted this year is considerably above the average, and at the time of planting rains were very favorable in most localities, and in nearly all sections a good stand was obtained.

It will be remembered that recently George Inman, the blind fiddler was killed by a man named St. Clair, near Livingston. The other day John Inman was fatally wounded by his brother Andy, by the accidental discharge of the latter's pistol, while both were cleaning their guns preparatory to starting in pursuit of St. Clair.

A violent earthquake shock visited Henderson on the morning of the 7th, which was much heavier than the two previous shocks felt there within the past four weeks. The effect seemed entirely different from the other, the first of which appeared as if some heavy article had upset on the floor above. The second shock appeared rotary in motion, causing the largest buildings in the town to rock. That of the 7th caused every building in the city to tremble, and was accompanied by a rumbling noise, similar to that caused by a heavy clap of thunder. The chimneys on several buildings were thrown off by the shock. News from different portions of the county report the effect the same as felt at Henderson. In Union, the adjoining county, the shock was not felt by any one.

A poor, emaciated and starving creature, who gave his name as Clement Lievering, was picked up on the Shelbyville pike, near Louisville, the other morning, and presented to the county court as a lunatic. He had been lying around the neighborhood, subsisting by beggary, for several weeks. The jury that examined him came to the conclusion that it was starvation and not lunacy that ailed him, and sent him to the alms-house.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Kentucky, a few days ago, through Captain John H. Leathers, cashier of the Louisville Banking Company, wired $250 to Charleston for the relief of the earthquake sufferers.

A Courier Journal special says: "Sunday afternoon Hiram Jennings and Allie Howard rode over to Sam Bailey's place, in Hardin County, and shot Bailey down without warning. Bailey died and the men surrendered themselves to the officers. No cause for the killing is assigned. In the same county, on Friday, Letcher Love shot and killed a woman named Martha Spencer, without any provocation."

David Kiger, of Moscow, this State, was killed by the cars at Poplar Bluff, Mo., the other day. He was sleeping on the track.

A man named Poynter, living two miles from Frankfort, was severely stabbed the other evening in Dead Shot alley by one of four brothers named Bradley. It is not known which one of the brothers committed the deed, nor is it known what was the origin of the affray, but it is believed it grew out of a horse trade between Poynter and Owen Bradley.

The Directors of the Louisville Library have concluded to sell the books at public auction and close up the institution finally. The sale will begin on the 15th, and will be made by classification of subjects.

AN IDIOTIC NOTION.

The Idea That the Democracy Would Attempt to Again Enslave the Colored Man. It Has Gone with the Bloody Shirt.

Another Republican State convention, that of Michigan, has adopted a platform without any allusion to the rights of colored men as distinguished from the rights of white men. Three such platforms in twelve constitute a most striking acknowledgment of the success of President Cleveland's Administration in eliminating the negro question from politics. It would not be far out of the way to say that the Republican party has declared "in thunder tones" that there is no longer any such issue, and that the accession of the Democrats to power has been the cause of its disappearance. It is certain that the Republicans never before failed to make the most of it. It is equally certain that they would not fail now to "wave the bloody shirt" if there were any such thing to wave. Moreover, the Republicans in convention assembled are just as keenly alive to the dangers attending Chinese labor, and pauper labor, as the Democrats. It is not that they have forgotten any of the rights or wrongs of the downtrodden and oppressed. They have simply recognized the fact that the ensanguined garment has gone from among us. Surely, nothing could be more easily spared.

The admirable disappearance suggests a few reflections on the last national campaign. We shall not chide the Republicans for their gloomy prophesyings about the dreadful fate of the negro in case Mr. Cleveland were elected President. They mostly believed what they said. But the truth must be told that excessive and exclusive attention to one idea almost always produces an unsettling of the mental balance, and causes the thinker to lose the sense of perspective. This is what Senator Hoar said was the matter with the Mugwumps two years ago. He said that their intense mental strain concerning the "spot" on Mr. Blaine's robe had caused them to lose all sense of the proportion of things. They could not see the impending fate of the negro in case Mr. Cleveland should be elected. They could only see the Mulligan letters. It was nothing to them that four millions of freedmen were about to be handed over to their former masters bound hand and foot. This was a trifle to them compared with a few beggarly railroad bonds. Such obliquity of vision was simply astounding.

The Mugwumps replied that the Democratic party would not dare, even if they were so inclined, to oppress the colored man, since the first recognizable evidence of such intentions would cause them to be hurled from power. They argued that the sense of responsibility for order and good government which power confers would lead this wicked party to be extremely careful in their ways, and that since the welfare of the negro, by reason of his geographical situation, was more dependent upon Democrats than upon Republicans any way, he would, perhaps, be even better off when the responsibility for his good treatment rested wholly upon the ex-rebels. It was argued, also—and this was perhaps the most amazing and impudent pretence of all—that the Democrats were one-half of the American people, and that what was good for them in the long run would be good for the rest of us. This was so opposed to the prevailing Republican conception of things, that no words could be found to characterize the pernicious folly. The conception, shared even by some bankers and college professors, was that the Democrats were not American citizens at all, except in form; that they were really a kind of foreigners reeking with Rum, Romanism and Rebellion, striving to gain control of the Government in order to overthrow it. The blow that Rev. Mr. Burchard struck was a severe one in its effect upon the "Irish contingent," because it expressed the common Republican view of the Democratic party. The Blaine Irishmen recognized its flavor immediately.

Along with the disappearance of the bloody shirt, and largely in consequence of it, there will also disappear the fantastic notion that one-half of the American people are bent upon the destruction of the Government and the establishment of some indescribable pow-wow in its stead. Probably no one who held this belief ever gave himself the trouble to define in his own mind what kind of society Mr. Cleveland and his party would set up on the ruins of the constitution, if they should once get power. Fortunately for all such, they are now spared the necessity of doing so.—N. Y. Post.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

——Mr. Blaine's speech is the speech of an advocate, and not the speech of a statesman.—Providence Journal (Rep.).

——Hon. William Maxwell Evarts, we rejoice to hear, has recovered from the effects of his recent accident, and will soon resume business at the old stand. Many a less conscientious patriot would have applied for a pension.—Brooklyn Eagle.

——Blaine wants the Prohibitionists to vote for the Republican candidates, and Blaine's lieutenant, Frye, is using his persuasive efforts in the same direction. He begins by calling the Prohibitionists "impudent, unblushing scoundrels." He probably intends them to understand that he regards them as above flattery.—Detroit Free Press.

——Mr. Blaine says that he does "not wish to be understood as saying that the recent labor troubles were the result of a Democratic Administration, but there is a suspicious contemporaneousness about the two which the Democrats should be called upon to explain." The panic of 1873, the labor riots of 1877, and the yellow-fever epidemic of 1878, may likewise not have been the result of a Republican Administration, but there was a suspicious contemporaneousness about them which the Republicans should be called upon to explain.—Chicago Times.

——Senator Mahone is a philosopher. He would have been glad to have succeeded himself as Senator, but the Fates and the votes decided otherwise. He is now willing to accept an election to the lower House as the successor of Congressman Brady. If a majority of the voters of the district are of the same way of thinking as Senator Mahone, the Virginia apostle of readjustment will continue to figure as an alleged statesman indefinitely. Such a result may be unfortunate for Virginia, but it will show that Senator Mahone is a patriot that is willing to take what he can get when he can't get all he wants.—Philadelphia Times.

THIRD PARTY TALK.

The Difficulty in the Way of Localizing the Prohibition Question—Mr. Frye and Mr. Blaine Do Not Agree.

Mr. Blaine's remarks in his speech on the Prohibition issue, be it observed, are directed exclusively to the people of the State of Maine.—Boston Journal.

The same fact has been remarked by some of the best of our Democratic commentators. The rest of his speech was especially shaped as a "key-note" to the Republicans of the whole country, but he dared not thus to treat the question of prohibition. He preferred to consider it as a local issue.

Even in thus treating it he has raised a storm of discontent. The Prohibitionists of his own party are after him with a sharp stick; and St. John, who lost him New York and the Presidency in 1884, is coming to Maine to help them. He joins in the charge of the Maine Prohibitionists that Mr. Blaine is trying to serve both God and Mammon—that "he preaches Prohibition and works for free rum."

His old lieutenant, Senator Frye, is working him great mischief by a violent preaching of that which he does not practice. That he is not himself adverse to the wine which is red in the cup, and to the champagne which bubbles lusciously in the long-necked glass, is well known; but he had the hardihood in his Houlton speech to utterly disregard Mr. Blaine's advice, and to exhibit himself as a Prohibitionist of the most ultra type. "I am a Prohibitionist," said he, "and I believe in its enforcement to the bitter end. I am in favor of the Republican party shouldering Prohibition, and I know that in time the party would conquer under that banner."

This is not the first nor the last evidence that Senator Frye has given in late years of his willingness to stick a little knife into Mr. Blaine's cause. Here is another passage from his same Houlton speech, which has set the country to wondering and has fairly startled Mr. Blaine's friends.

> "If you see a man marching through the streets marked 'I am no honest man,' distrust him at once. You take a magnificent bridal dress, with its ribbons and splendid laces, and put it on exhibit on with a little ink spot on its skirt, and you will find plenty of men and women who will see nothing but that spot. Now, the people of this country, with an exquisite fidelity to the best interest of the Nation, saw the little bit of a smirch on the skirt of Mr. Blaine's coat, and, therefore, voted that Mr. Cleveland, a man who was smirched from head to foot, should be President."

Here is an open confession of one of Maine's Republican Senators, before a great public meeting, that there was "a smirch on Mr. Blaine's coat." It is singular, is it not?

But, returning to the Prohibition question, Mr. Blaine will speedily find that, as a professed national leader of his party, he can not confine his public declarations upon this question to the State of Maine. We wholly mistake the signs of the times if, in the next two years, Prohibition does not play a greater part in the politics of this country than ever before. In Maine, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan Prohibition "third parties" promise this year to control the balance of power, and to determine the result of the State elections. If this shall prove true, then in the national contest of 1888 we shall witness a vote for the Prohibition National ticket such as never before has been dreamed of. The Plumed Knight will not be able to maintain his position in the dark. He will be forced to come out from behind his concealing platitudes and to declare whether he is "for or against."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

BLAINE'S DISHONESTY.

The Continental Fabricator from Maine Charging the Democracy with Being Responsible for the Labor Troubles.

In his speech, to the preparation of which a year was devoted, at Sebago Lake, the other day, Blaine called attention to the labor strikes, and insinuated that the policy of the Democratic party was responsible for them. It would be difficult to imagine a more reckless or untruthful accusation. Does Blaine forget the railway strikes of a few years ago, when the militia of nearly every State in the Union was called to arms, and even the regular army had to be employed in saving property and preventing bloodshed? The Democrats were not in power then, for the Republicans had every thing their own way, and even in Pennsylvania, where the State has launched out millions of dollars to railroad companies for damage done by strikers, not a Democrat was in a State office. Which party was in power when the telegraph operators' strike occurred and paralyzed trade for weeks? Who was responsible for the strike in the Hocking valley, Ohio, in the year 1884, which kept the country at fever heat for months, and blood trickled down the bleak hills of that coal region? It was shown at the time that Blaine was a stockholder in the Hocking valley company, which imported Hungarian miners to starve natives into subjection. The continental fabricator from Maine ought to steer clear of the subject of strikes, for the fact is well known that labor agitation was foreign to this country until the Republican party came into power. Scarcely had Blaine's falsehoods been scattered broadcast over the land when the news was telegraphed from Pittsburgh that nail mills, which have been idle for a long time, were about to start full blast under satisfactory arrangements with employes. It is strange that a man who has been in public life twenty-five years as Blaine has should stand up before an intelligent people and utter such malicious falsehoods as he is handing out by wholesale. Does this impudent man who was steeped in corruption think the American people dolts, ready to accept as truth his falsehood? The game he is playing is a desperate one but it will fail of its object, for the voters of this country know the man who wrote "burn this letter," sold his vote as a representative of the citizens of Maine for Little Rock and Fort Smith stock, and attempted to rob poor Peru so that he might share the bogus claims of a French adventurer. Is it to be presumed that such a man, no matter what he may say, will have weight with thinking men who have the best interests of the country at heart? The glamor with which the blatherskite has surrounded his words will give way to honest penetration and will stand forth as the utterances of a man destitute of common honesty.—Buffalo Times.

——Even the most stalwart Republican organs recognize the fact that Jeff. Davis is "played out" as an issue. The Burlington (Ia.) Hawkeye characterizes his recent address before a Mississippi Democratic convention as "very temperate," and refuses to get at all excited over it.—N. Y. Post.

The following from a Washington special to the Courier-Journal will give a pretty good idea of the immensity of the pension business:

"The whole number of pensioners who on account of the rebellion have borne upon the pension rolls in the period from 1861 to June 3, 1883, is 501,881. The whole amount paid to these pensioners during that period was $810,810,020 18. During the fiscal year ending June 30, '86, there were issued 81,422 pension certificates; for the month of June alone there were issued 10,375 certificates, and that for the same fiscal year the payments were $65,717,380. The new names added to the rolls foot up 41,166, of which 2,311 were restorations.

"During the present Administration the payments for pensions in some individual cases were very heavy; for instance, Samuel W. Robertson, Company K. Fourth Kansas, received first payment, $11,933 56. Marcus D. Richardson was granted a pension August 30, 1886, for total blindness; his first payment was $11,741 12.

A pension was granted on September 3, to Mose McFadden for total insanity. This involved a first payment of $11,063 75, and $72 per month from said date.

The Carrollton Democrat in speaking of Judge Montfort, who is holding his first term at that place says: "Judge Warren Monfort is fully meeting the highest expectations of his friends. Quick in apprehending all questions that arise, prompt in making his rulings, very systematic in his methods, he despatches business with celerity; and while his affable and courteous manner toward the bar and litigants causes everything to run smoothly, his firmness puts upon his decisions a degree of finalty which practically prevents contention. His well known conscientiousness and clearheadedness, coupled with his undisputed legal abilities, clothe his opinions and utterances with an air of justice and authority, which, producing satisfaction among the lawyers, inspires general confidence among the people in this their most important tribunal. In short, there is every reason to be proud of our Circuit Judge who, if not the ablest one, is certainly the peer of any judge in Kentucky."

In his interview published in Monday's Enquirer, Mr. Carlisle says: "By the way, here are some facts upon the pension business which may be new to you—they certainly were unknown to me until Mr. Spofford, the Congressional Librarian, called my attention to them. They have always been fighting in Europe. They have had a great many wars there. We have had but one war to which we are paying pensions. Yet we are paying to-day for pensions fully one-third more than all the other civilized nations of the earth are paying. Our payment of pensions to soldiers and sailors this year will be $76,750,000, while the aggregate payment of all other nations of the world combined is considerably less than $60,000,000." All of Mr. Carlisle's statements regarding public expenditures, you find fortified by the figures as are the above.

In this issue is published the programme for the next meeting of the Boone County Teachers' Association. The teachers have not been taking very great interest in these meetings in the past, although the Association's mission is to improve the teacher—elevating him to a higher plane of usefulness. The teachers should be regularly organized and laboring in the same direction, and the Association affords a medium for the accomplishment of much which will redound to the interest of the teachers who take the pains to attend the meetings. For the next meeting the efficient secretary has arranged a programme which is calculated to make it very interesting if those assigned to duty will prepare themselves and attend.

The Covington Correspondent of the Louisville Commercial has discovered that the kid element in Covington is opposed to Mr. Carlisle. No doubt but that if that correspondent was to investigate closely he would discover that the opposing element about which he writes is very small and so extremely kiddish that very few of the number have arrived at the age entitling them to the privilege of suffrage.

Gen. John A. Logan declines all invitations to speak outside of Illinois, where he will devote his entire time until the close of the Congressional campaign. The [illegible] is paving the way for the head of the next Republican Presidential ticket, and to accomplish his effort in that direction, Illinois if possible, must increase the number of Republican Congressmen. Logan will be onto all these things.

J. S. Gaines will make a good and efficient Commonwealth's Attorney. We have promised that much to the district and without boasting too much on our own man his course and his success at this term show that he is worthy and capable. With the aid of good juries he has made many more convictions than are usually made in the number of cases tried.—Carrollton Democrat.

The new State liquor license law went into effect on the 11th inst., at which time license for the sale of spirits were increased from $100 to $150, and malt liquors be required to pay $50. The new law does not interfere with existing licenses.

Yesterday the most youthful married couple we have ever seen were were united in the holy bonds by Rev. D. S. Campbell, at the county clerk's office. The bride was older by a month than the groom, but neither of them had attained their 15th year. The groom looks extremely young and tender, and luxuriates in the name of Buddie Thomas Elijah Sylvester McCormic. The bride is a very modest, pretty little girl. Her maiden name was Miss Valdorious West.—Russellville Herald.

The marked progress made by the farmers of Morgan county in the past few years, in the improvement of their residences, stock and mode of cultivation of the soil, marks a new era in the agricultural interests of the county. The Harrodsburg Democrat says: A few days ago Mr. Joe Mc[illegible], of the Shaker Road neighborhood, shipped sixteen hogsheads of tobacco to a house in Louisville. A day or two thereafter he was somewhat surprised at the receipt of a letter from the Louisville parties saying that it was spoiled and only worth 14 cents a pound. Mr. M[illegible] went to the city on the first train and learned that it was only too true. It seems that at the beginning of the season he employed an Owen county man who represented himself to be a tobacco expert. The tobacco was well cultivated and a fine crop resulted. When packing it in hogsheads water heated for the purpose, was sprinkled over it every few layers, which the warehousemen in Louisville claim did the damage.

The London Echo suggests Gen. W. J. Landram as the Republican candidate for Congress against Gov. McCreary.

The Republicans of the Second (Laffoon's) district will probably nominate Hon Geo W. Jolly, of Owensboro, for Congress.

Eloquence and ability in a Congressman are not enough. With some of either replaced by a little capacity for hard work and a heap of it, a man is better fitted for the place.—Owensboro Inquirer.

A SWEET APOLOGY.

How a Miss of Seventeen Conquered Her Lover.

"I wish you wouldn't fidget so, Harry. How do you expect we can get these pictures arranged when you joggle the table in that outrageous manner?"

"Well, I'm sure, Nell," answered the accused, deprecatingly, "it's rather rough on a fellow to be compelled to sit the best part of an evening handling the paste-pot and sorting fancy cards. I thought you had outgrown that sort of thing when you put away your school books."

"That shows all you know," was the contemptuous rejoinder. "As if these albums were not all the rage, and Alice, so good and thoughtful, bringing all the newest and loveliest cards from Paris. Why, my dear boy, (this in a triumphant tone,) my book will be a long way the most beautiful one in town."

"Yes, I know," muttered the young man, with a reprehensible lack of interest. "But you promised to let me row you across Silver Lake this evening. The moonlight nights are nearly gone and we haven't settled any thing yet, Nellie."

"Can't you talk before Alice? I'm sure we needn't mind her."

Here I, being the Alice referred to, hastily rose and offered to resign my position as "paster-in-chief."

"No, no," Nell exclaimed.

"I am going to get more paste," I answered.

"Why don't you use mucilage?" queried Mr. Harry, in a conciliatory tone, resigning himself to the inevitable.

"Because we haven't any and they are out of it at the stationer's, so we thought a little home-made material would do as well."

"Oh, no, it won't," ejaculated Harry, with alacrity. "I wouldn't do any more just now. It would be far better to wait and finish your work with the proper stuff. Come (this very pleadingly) a little row will do you good, and Miss Alice will perhaps join us," continued our hero, with a suspicious lack of warmth.

Gracefully declining the invitation, I watched the young lovers slowly treading Miller's lane.

About an hour had elapsed, and I was comfortably doing my hair preparatory to seeking my downy couch, when Nell rushed in my room with blazing eyes and heightened color, and, flinging herself on a chair, exclaimed: "Harry and I have had such a row."

"Indeed, I replied, unmoved by a statement whose recurrence could be estimated as happening about once every twenty-four hours.

"Yes," said Nell, somewhat crushed by my lack of sympathy, "and, Allie, it was all about a miserable box of bonbons which Fred Clarke, that clever young lawyer, brought me from the city. Harry said he wished I would get over my childish love for sweets, that it was ruinous to the digestion, to say nothing of my lovely teeth. I told him he only made my health an excuse, that the truth of the matter was jealousy. Jealousy about poor Fred, and he needn't think because he had just taken his doctor's diploma that he could commence practice with me as first patient. Well, you can readily understand, dear, how one word led to another, but when Harry wound up in his conceited way by declaring medicine to be a noble profession and law a despicable one, I tell you I couldn't stand it, and I informed his highness that I would never speak to him again unless he made me an apology, and what do you think? The wretch laughed and walked off saying: 'Oh, certainly, Miss Nicolls, I'll make a sweet apology,'" and with a burst of tears sweet Nell, who after all was little more than a mere child, relapsed into despair on a mammoth lady, thereby reducing the red ribbons to irredeemable dampness. I, with my five years' seniority, hardly knew what consolation would prove most efficacious in soothing indignant seventeen.

It was useless to indicate that it was a mere boy and girl spat about a stick of candy, or that it was quite proper for the incipient physician to object to an undue indulgence in sweets, or to hint at the flattery which is always conveyed by the demon of jealousy.

All these suggestions were received with scorn, from the indisputable fact that Harry had made himself disagreeable "in the first," objecting to the harmless amusement of "making an album," giving vent to sarcasms regarding the pictures, the paste and various other things connected with the artistic employment.

"Nell, Nell," yelled the musical Tommy, as my cousin's brother was called. "Here's a package for you."

"Early! Of course not. Why I could [illegible] a whole row of 'em just like them in Keller's grocery yesterday."

He's decided all doubts on the matter and with a happy laugh and brimming over with happiness, Nell dispatched Tom to ask auntie if we might have hot biscuits for tea, "and Tommy, dear," added our heroine insinuatingly, "You'll run over to Willow farm, won't you, with a note, and I'll finish your reins before you get back."

"All right, see that you do," was the patronizing response, as he rushed off to execute his mission. As soon as he was well out of sight and sound Nell exclaimed: "Why, Alice, don't you see? Why, it's as clear as day. Poor Harry, how clever of him."

Perceiving that I did not comprehend, she continued: "Don't you remember how provoked I was because Harry declared emphatically that of course he would make me an apology—'a sweet apology'—and—here it is"—holding it up against the sunlight triumphantly. "I shall send him a dear little note saying the apology is accepted, and ask him to tea," and clasping the sweet treasure in both small hands she hastened to the house and lost no time in penning the few words which would pardon and recall the erring one. Aunt Mary gave us carte blanche, and much delight was expressed at the prospect of light biscuits, fresh butter and golden honey.

Prompt to the moment came the repentant swain. Greeted with smiles was he by a lovely little maiden, dressed in an exquisitely fitting pale blue cashmere robe, particularly becoming to my fair cousin.

Not a word was said in reference to the past.

As for Harry, he looked a picture of puzzled delight at his love's magnanimity. We seated ourselves about Aunt Mary's bountiful board, and after each had been served with cold chicken, jelly and light snowy biscuits, almost too hot to touch, conversation began. "Nellie, what in the world have you got that thing for there?" inquired Mr. Blessing indicating the jar.

"Just wait and you'll see," nodded our pretty hostess, as with dexterous fingers she quickly loosened the top. At this moment I noticed a peculiar smile pass over Mr. Blessing's countenance.

Expectant Tommy, who could no longer restrain his feelings, demanded a liberal and immediate distribution.

"Tom, keep quiet!" cried Nell. "It's my turn first."

"Of course, that's only fair," echoed the chorus at the table.

"But hadn't you better wait till—"

"I don't see the reason why," stammered the bewildered Harry.

The chorus united in a full cry of "Oh, hush!" "That'll do!" "Give me some!" etc., etc., until our friend Harry was tendered quite inaudible.

Nell poured a generous quantity of honey over her delicately-buttered biscuit.

"Ah!" murmured she, raising it to her lips.

"Ah!" echoed the sympathetic chorus. The lovely mouth closed quickly over a goodly bite.

"Nell!" shrieked Harry, "what are you doing?" and grasping her arm he sprang from his chair, overturning the jar and ruining the blue cashmere forever.

My cousin covered her face with a napkin and fled from the room. I followed her. Mr. Blessing did not wait further developments. Tom rolled on the floor in ecstasy of merriment, while poor Aunt Mary and Uncle James were left solitary and surprised at the tea table.

Is it necessary to tell our readers how vainly poor Harry tried to explain that in the humility of his spirit he had purchased a large jar of the very finest liquid glue at Keller's grocery, and how he contemplated helping with heart and hand to complete the album which had occasioned so much disturbance. He had brought a charming collection of peace offerings, and was naturally confused to find his mucilage placed upon the supper table?

I am sure you will readily see that nothing short of unceasing devotion to fancy picture albums, albums large and small, of all sorts and shapes and sizes, to cover her with a collection of character cards from all corners of the civilized world and in addition, an humble submission to the inevitable in the form of cream chocolate bonbons—then, and not until then, did our fair Nell accept "a sweet apology."—*Springfield (Mass.) The Lawrenceburg Fair commences on the 21st day of September, 1886. The enormous premiums which it always pays have given it and now insures the largest and best exhibits of any county or district Fair in Indiana. Careful management has made its awards satisfactory in every instance; the accommodations of its beautiful grounds and the certainty of clever treatment combine to make a visit pleasant. The six Fairs held by the association have been splendid successes, and the prospects of the approaching Fair promises more than any preceding year. Everybody should go to the Lawrenceburgh Fair, and there is but little choice of days, for the programme includes interesting and exciting features for each day.

A very large crowd attended the sale of the personal property of Mrs. Frances Blankenbecker, deceased, last Thursday. Live stock, especially the horses, sold very high, the prices ranging from $70 for an old gray mare to $210 for a young gray horse. The four horses sold brought on an average $158 75. This is rather remarkable for a country sale.

In her life time Mrs. Blankenbecker was a lady who took great pride in having an abundance of everything about her house, and that, too, of the best quality. During the existence of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association, she used to take all the premiums in the ring in which her goods were exhibited, and at the time of her death she had on hand all the articles, such as blankets, quilts, toweling, &c., on which she had taken premiums. These articles were not put up for sale, the two sons taking them.

Among other things sold were about 1000 pounds of soft soap, a half barrel of which was bought by Mrs. Blankenbecker at her mother's sale about forty years ago. Of the furniture there were several articles which were made in [illegible] years ago, and which looked as good as new.

A large number of ladies were present, and when an article of table linen or bed clothing was put up, knowing its good quality, they would bid their eyes and make a bid and the articles would bring a fancy price.

A great many farming implements were sold, and all being in good repair, brought fair prices. One wagon that was sold was made in Old Virginia many, many years ago, and had been well preserved.

At noon the large crowd was feasted on ham sandwiches of the best quality, which were passed around through the crowd, everybody having all they wanted to eat.

The excessively hot weather last week did not militate against a large attendance at the Association which was held with the Big Bone Baptist Church and the crowd each day was unprecedentedly large, the general verdict being that it exceeded any they ever saw assembled on a similar occasion. The services were held in the beech grove near the church, and the discourses delivered during the three days were listened to with profound interest. To feed the people a long table had been constructed and each day at noon this table was laden with edibles for the preparation of which the good cooks who provided the food can not be excelled. The table was long enough from which to feed a small army, but it could not accommodate the great abundance of provisions, and numerous persons were compelled to find other places for spreading their dinners. Some of the members made it their special duty to, and did, see that everybody present partook of the dinners to which all were invited. The residences of those who resided in the vicinity of the church were thrown open for the entertainment of those from a distance, and strangers were made to feel perfectly at home.

Nothing calculated to contribute to the entertainment and comfort of those who attend the meetings was left undone, and the meeting can truly be pronounced a feast of both soul and body.

Next year the Association will be held with the church at this place, and it remains to be seen if the people of the town and country immediately surrounding will be as liberal in the entertainment of those from a distance as their Big Bone neighbors were.

We have not been able to learn what business of importance to the church was transacted during the session, except the appointment of a committee which will address a circular to the several churches in the North Bend Association requesting contributions for mission purposes.

CLUBBED BY INVISIBLE HANDS.

Clods and Tobacco Worms Flying through the air Promiscuously.

The Hands Leave the Field in Fright.

Special to the Recorder:

Gainesville, Ky., Sept., 8.—This vicinity has a genuine sensation which sounds very much like a ghost story. Mr. John H. Jarrell resides about a mile and a half from here and he has two boys hired, working in tobacco. Monday the boys were working in the tobacco patch alone and noticed very large tobacco worms falling from above them, sometimes striking them. From worms the falling objects changed to clubs, stones, clods of earth, tufts of grass, ears of corn and corn stalks. This continued all day and the boys became very much frightened. They went home at night and reported their experience to Mr Jarrell, who had been away from home. He ridiculed the boys for being so superstitious, and next morning sent them back; but they were not long in returning, almost out of breath, and reported the same experience as the day before. This time Mr. Jarrell went with them and when near the tobacco patch was struck by a falling clod of earth, then an ear of corn fell in front of him, after which clubs, stones and clods, continued to fall about them, sometimes striking them at intervals from thirty minutes to an hour for the remainder of the day. Mr. Jarrell is a man whose word is as good as the best, and he reported the above to your correspondent in person, and has promised to report immediately if this strange state of affairs occurs again, that we may visit the place and be convinced of the truth of what he says. He knows that it cannot be any person secluded and throwing these things, for the tobacco patch is out in an open field, and he has searched thoroughly for any person hidden and knows that they came from the space above him. Some of the clods he recognized as those he had seen in the patch.

LAWRENCEBURGH FAIR

On the 21st day of September the Seventh Annual Fair of the Lawrenceburgh Agricultural Association opens, to continue until the 25 day of September. As the crops have all been large this season and business all over the country is good, a successful exhibition is confidently expected. The managers have prepared a long and liberal list of premiums, containing all the customary and regulation articles, and in addition to them a number of special features which cannot fail to attract and interest a large number.

The lovers of live stock can see it here. The stalls are always filled with the best that our county affords, than which there is no finer, and our neighboring counties contribute a fair quota. In cattle, sheep, hogs and draft horses classes dealers and breeders will find abundant material to challenge their admiration.

The races will draw good crowds also, as in Dearborn and Boone counties are many admirers of the noble quadruped, the horse, and many fine specimens of the best trotting, pacing and running stock. Good purses are offered in every class and races arranged for every day. An exciting contest will be the result in the pony race.

The mule race, fast and slow, will afford much amusement.

In the ladies department and floral hall in former years have been exhibited the production of the skill of Dearborn's best talent in cuisine and needle work and this year will prove no exception.

The farmer will find on exhibition the best products of the fertile fields and gardens of this county's broad acres and the latest and best implements for their cultivation.

All of our local chicken fanciers are preparing to make a display of their fowls and a poultry show of considerable proportions will be the result, and well worth visiting.

Arrangements are being perfected for exhibitions by the champion bicycle riders of the world.

On the whole everything points to a Fair creditable to the county and management. So get ready to attend with your wives and families.

Cy Brice, of Clinton county, Missouri, accompanied by Mrs. Minerva White, arrived here Sunday. Cy is looking well and is pleased with his Western home. He says it has been very dry in his country all season, and the farmers find it necessary to feed their stock on account of the grass being dried up. Notwithstanding the drought they had a good crop of small grain, and their corn will make seven barrels to the acre. The Recorder has been keeping Cy posted as to the occurrences in this section.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1829. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating voraciously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed form the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. Schwartz & Haslett, Pittsburg, Pa.,
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family. Yours, &c.,
J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

A SUMMER MEMORY.

[illegible]

Up against the mellow skies I
Gradual sloping hills arise
Wooded by great trees, that screen
With their whispering tribes of green
Winding roads, whose shadows seem Like the visions of a dream.

Here along the noisy brooks,
In the hidden, sunlit nooks,
Where the [illegible] anemone
Woos the kisses of the bee,
Blooming just within the shade
By a massive oak tree made.

Here the hours are cool and fleet,
And we move with lingering feet
Down the slope, and see the sun,
When the meadow paths are won,
Flaming just above the crest
Of a mountain in the west.

HE HAD IT OFF.

Why An Honest Workman Parted with His Arm.

In the St. James' Hospital the man's surgical wards are at the top of the building. That is where the accidents are brought in. Any moment of the day or night a whistle through the tube may announce that a fresh case is coming up. Possibly it may prove a matter of a sprained ankle, possibly of injuries only just short of death. Outsiders imagine life in the surgical ward to be a constant succession of shocks to the nerves. But all who enter there leave nerves behind, or, to speak more correctly, the nerves are kept tense, guarded, ready for all surprises and all demands. Still, I have heard Nurse Wilmot confess to a strange sensation, though more of excitement than of dread, when she sees the form of the foremost of the two policemen bearing the stretcher appear around the corner of the door. The questions must rise unbidden—What poor soul is this brought here for its appointed measure of pain? and what destiny is this day's work to consummate? Is it death, or is it life weighted with some crippling injury? Is it moral salvation or moral ruin? The drift of a life, or, perhaps, many lives, may be determined this hour.

But one can only imagine such reflections occupying the mind as the nurse watches the new patient carried to a bed under some one else's charge. If he is to be under her own care there is no margin left for them, all her power must be summoned to the front and absorbed in the duty of the moment. His hurts have been attended to down stairs, dressed and bound, but there is still much for the nurse to do which requires prompt attention and a steady hand. She must fly hither and thither, alert yet composed. If it is a case of fracture a special bed must be prepared. If the vital heat is lowered by the shock hot bottles must be at once procured. Then the patient must be made as clean and comfortable as his condition permits, and if he is neither insensible nor too ill he must, during the process, be cheered and soothed by kindly speech.

Nurse Wilmot has told me many stories of patients that have come under her care, and one of them I will set down here as nearly as I can remember as she told it to me:

At about half-past six o'clock one winter afternoon the well-known sound came up the tube, and Sister Janet directed that one of my beds should receive the new-comer. It was a young man, a strapping fellow. Of his face I could see little, for it was bound up for injuries to the head and jaw, and one of his arms was broken. I expected to hear that he had fallen from a scaffold, or had been run over in the street, but the policeman said they had brought him from his own home, where they had been told he had fallen down stairs. The story could have only one meaning, I feared. The majority of the cases come to us through drink, and the policeman as he told it made a sign which was sufficiently satisfactory, if any explanation were needed.

"There was an old woman mixed up in it, his mother, and I take it they'd been soaking together," said he.

The new patient took no part in these explanations. Though he had not uttered a groan I could see he was in great distress and he could speak only with difficulty.

"I'm glad, at any rate," said I, "that you appear to have no wife and family to be pinched while you're out of work. You're better off than a great many that come here."

He nodded his head and looked at me, and I saw at once that he had been misjudged—he had not been drinking. The look was too direct and intelligent, and so expressive of manly endurance that my sympathy went out to him at once. We have sympathies as tender as other women, we nurses, I hope, though sometimes we joke and laugh when other women would cry.

"You are not a drinking man?" I asked.

He shook his head.

"The doctors will tell you to-morrow morning that's in your favor."

Hicks, the stout cabman in the next bed, overheard the remark. "Now, nurse, come, we ain't no need to be told that. We ain't under no delusion as to the voos in this 'ere place, and if we was 'ere's Thomson at 'and to expound 'em to us hany hour of the day hor night."

This speech was intended as a challenge to Thomson, the pale-faced shoemaker in the next bed, who accepted it as such, and a discussion followed which was much relished by such of the invalids round us could hear it.

I did not hear any more of the discussion, nor which had the best of it in the end. My attention became completely taken up with my patient, who had sunk into a very low state now that he was quietly in bed. I had done all I could for him and was occupied in another part of the ward, when I saw Sister Janet bringing a woman up to his bedside. I was sorry to see he had such [illegible], for he seemed to be a respectable decent young fellow. This [illegible] he could not reply [illegible] signs. But this did not seem to [illegible]. She was very voluble, and addressed herself to me and to Hicks in the neighboring bed. She said all in a breath what a pity it was when a fine young man like her son, and the only support of his [illegible] mother, took to drink, and how she'd begged and prayed of him to leave it off, so sure she was that no good would come of it, and now her words had come true, for he had fallen down the height of a flight of stairs on to the stones, along of the railings giving way when she was a-getting him up as drunk as anything, and now there he was and she without a farthing, and would I kindly lend her a trifle; and she ended with a burst of tears. Of course I could see what Sister Janet, being rather inexperienced and [illegible], had not noticed, that the woman was herself under the influence of drink and must be got away as quickly as possible, which I proceeded to do. Of course the scene was witnessed by all the patients near at hand. I fancied Hicks looked somewhat abashed, though he was reading his paper with great diligence. I suppose he expected Thomson to improve the occasion for teetotalism, but Thomson with, I thought, some delicacy, left the incident to point its own moral.

It must have been an hour after the departure of the mother when Sister Janet beckoned me across the ward.

"Here is another person asking for No. 9," she said. "They should not have given another pass to-night. I can't let her in. She came just after the other woman was gone, and she has been standing outside for above an hour. Try and see if you can persuade her to go."

I went out. What a contrast from No. 9's last visitor! A small, slim girl, pale as death, but quite collected. She clasped her hands.

"Ah, if madame would permit me within! It is his mother that was come. That she has made harm, it is possible, yes. But I would not make him harm, me. I would regard only, and is it that madame thinks it would make him harm? Ah, non, impossible!"

"Are you his wife?"

The pale face flushed. "Ah, non; to-morrow, madame, we marry ourselves."

Poor things! I felt for them. But I told her it was better for him to keep quiet, and that she could come and sit with him to-morrow, being visiting afternoon.

"But, madame, if he die! It is necessaire that I speak to him; ah, it is necessaire!"

I told her that he was not dangerously hurt; that being a strong, sober young man, there was every chance of a speedy recovery, and that as his jaw was hurt he could not speak to her if she went to him.

"I will expect, madame, all the night, if it is necessaire: I will expect till he sleep, if I may then regard him."

I could resist the pleading no longer, and I suspected Sister Janet of sending me to the task because she was unable to do so. I went back to her. No, it would not do; she could not go back from her word. However, she finally gave way so far as to consent to the girl's coming inside and looking at Anderson from where he could not see her. Then she went away somewhat pacified. I offered to give any message she liked.

"Ah, non, Madame," she said; "you are so good. I thank you from my heart. But madame understands the words must come from me to him. Tell him that I come—that is all."

The girl was very winning.

As the hours passed, Anderson, distressing though his condition was, uttered no word of complaint, and once when I adjusted his pillows and got a spoonful of milk between his lips with great effort he managed to say: "I feel ever so much better." And the night nurse told me next morning that he had been just as patient during his sleepless night. The little French girl came that afternoon at the earliest moment of visitors' time and stayed till the latest. She sat by the bedside and held his hand, as quiet as a little mouse. She did not appear to say much, but I suppose they had a language of their own. She came every week. His mother also came, but not so regularly. The girl never yielded her place to the elder woman, but sat still by the bedside, looking at her all the time with an extraordinarily fierce expression. The woman seemed to me cowed by it, and never stayed long. I was so interested in the two young people that I used to watch them as I sat at my needlework at the end of the ward. I wondered what was going on below the surface. It was evident that the elder woman and the younger were not friendly to each other. The young man, I thought, between the two, might have a difficult position. He went on fairly well for some time, and by degrees grew able to speak and eat with comfort, but his arm did not progress as it should. It was a very bad case of what the doctors call a compound comminuted fracture. How the accident happened remained a mystery. I had my suspicions, but could make nothing out of Anderson, who was extremely reserved. When I asked him how he came to tumble down stairs like a baby, he answered that he supposed it was along of clumsiness, and that in their place the stairs were dark and rotten. But I could not believe he had fallen without cause, and as I felt sure the cause had not been drink, I could not help suspecting there had been some foul play.

He had been in hospital a month or five weeks when the doctors began to look very grave over the arm, and at last one morning they broke it to him that it would have to be amputated. I did not hear how he took it at first, for I went into the ward kitchen on pretence of fetching something for the doctors, and cried. Such a fine, good young fellow, just going to be married, and by trade a carpenter! I said to myself that he would bear it like a man. But when I got back, to my surprise I found the doctor much out of patience. Anderson had flatly refused to have it taken off? "Here, nurse," cried the doctor, "you come and talk to him and persuade the silly fellow not to throw away his life," and he left me to the task. We nurses are used to bringing a bright face and firm voice to such tasks as these, even when our hearts are sore, as mine was then. But it was of no use. Anderson, poor fellow, seemed as if turned to stone: all the life had gone out of his face. He was hard and silent and replied to me only by curt refusals. This state of things went on for some days. Every morning the doctors tried again, but I left off arguing, for I saw it was of no use. However, I looked to visitors' day to change his mind, and only wished it had been nearer, for his arm was in a terrible state. And yet I dreaded it too, thinking of the shock the news would be to the poor little French sweetheart who had been hoping so soon to be his wife. Would she have nerve enough to set aside her own feelings and try to reconcile him to the loss of his arm and the altered life before him?

The afternoon arrived, and I saw poor Anderson with a face that made my heart swell with pity watching the door. But she was not as punctual as usual. The afternoon wore on, the visitors left the ward and she had not come. [illegible] I thought. I did not know any thing that passed between them. She looked to me somewhat the worse for drink. I do not know when I have been more taken in than by that girl's not appearing. I had counted on it with such certainty. I [illegible] believe the hour was gone, even while I looked at the clock. As for the poor fellow, I could only guess at what he felt.

"Do you know why your friend has not come to see you to-day?" I asked him as cautiously as I could. He was so shy of talking about himself that I was afraid of [illegible] him. He only said: "No, I don't [illegible] for certain," but he looked at me as if he had wanted to tell me more, and I thought it would come. And so it did that night when I gave him his medicine. He said just as I was leaving him:

"I say, nurse, I want to send a letter."

"Do you?" I said. "I will write it for you with pleasure. Who is it to be sent to?" though of course I knew.

"It's to my girl," and he grew red and very bashful.

"I suppose you want to tell her about your arm?"

"She knows that. There was a man went out yesterday that lives in our yard and he told my mother and she told her."

So this was the end of the little French girl's devotion! Now that there was no chance of his being able to keep her she would not even come to see him. As I could not say what I felt I held my tongue. Anderson went on:

"Will you say in the letter that she needn't be afraid of me wanting to keep her at her word? Tell her I ain't going to have my arm off. I'll take my chance. I don't want any thing from her, but just to come once to see me for the sake of old times. Don't forget to put that in, nurse—for the sake of old times. Perhaps she is in the right to keep away, but I'd rather she'd come just for once, do you see?"

I wrote the letter and posted it. I should like to have added a few words of my own to the young lady, but I thought I had better not meddle. Would you believe it? No answer came from that heartless girl. The arm was getting worse, and the doctors said that nothing but amputation could save his life. But Anderson couldn't be moved from his resolve. He said that if die he must, why he would die like a man, but that he'd known a fellow that kept his leg for twenty years after the doctors wanted it cut off. But he was so low and looked so hopeless that I feared he did not care much which way it went, and that was terribly against him. He needed something to give him heart enough to face life afresh as a cripple, and to bring himself to beg for such work as a cripple can do—he who had been a skilled artisan, an aristocrat of labor. A woman who loved him might do it, I thought, but visiting day came round, and again the mother came, but no sweetheart, and there could be no longer any doubt of her faithlessness. I begged Anderson to take it like a man, give up thinking of her, and have his arm off next morning. I told him it was pride that stood in the way, but that he would show a far better kind of pride in submitting to the will of God and making the best of his misfortunes like a brave man. He listened to me with attention, and though he did not answer I saw I had made an impression; though, I am sure as I spoke, and thought of his ruined life, I felt how different a thing practice and precept are. By and by he said:

"Nurse, perhaps I didn't ought to say it, but I can't trust to what my mother says. I can't get to the bottom of what she told me this afternoon. She's a spite against my girl on account of my taking to her. You go out of doors, don't you, nurse?"

He asked this so wistfully that I hastened to assure him I would go anywhere he liked for him in my off-duty time. So it was settled I should go to the house where his mother and the girl both lodged, and see if all was right. Happily, I had leave of absence that evening after tea. "You see my mother is overtaken with the drink now and again," he said, in a shamefaced undertone, "and she has a terrible grudge against Marie, on account of its being along of her that she was put out with me; and you see, Marie don't make no allowance for her being in the drink that evening. And she don't know what fear is, that girl. She'll up and say any thing to the old woman." In his excitement he never saw that he was letting out his secret. I held my peace and marveled at the absence of bitterness toward the mother who had been the cause of his misfortunes.

I had no difficulty in finding the court to which Anderson directed me. It was such a place as none but the London poor are doomed to live in. I should not have relished going into it after dark but for my nurse's garb, in which we are safe anywhere. And if I had been timid I need only have addressed myself to a policeman and he would have walked with me anywhere. So many of the force have been nursed by us that they are always pleased to show us attention.

I had made up my mind to see the girl herself, if possible; but when I made my inquiry for her of the grimy person who lived, with many others, no doubt, on the ground floor, I found that she had left the house! Did they know where she was gone? No, they did not, nor did they know whether Mrs. Anderson was in. I might go up and see, if I liked, upon which they disappeared into the gloom. I thought I had better try "going up," and it was well I did so, for I met a tidy-looking woman coming down, who not only could tell me that she had seen Mrs. Anderson go out, but that she knew where the young woman had gone to, but would not tell me unless I wanted it "for her good." So I got the address and went to find the place, though I half repented me of the errand, for this changing lodgings secretly, as if to cut off all appeal, seemed to me the most heartless thing the young woman had done. "Three pair back" being the direction I received at the front door, I groped my way up stairs as pitch dark as they usually are in such houses, and in answer to my tap, Marie herself appeared at the door. The room was as neat as possible and quite pretty in its poor way, and she herself dressed in a trim dark dress with snowy French cap and apron. But it was only in the moment that passed before she recognized me that I had the heart to observe all this. Poor child, how she cried! I am afraid I began by being harsh to her, being so full of her supposed heartlessness.

"Ah, madame, is it that he thinks me faithless? Madame, since I could not go to-day I write to him even now, voyez-vous." And I saw that she had been setting with pen and paper before her. "Ah, le pauvre garcon! I could not go, non; I am blanchisseuse at the French laundry and the principal change itself; and she know not me and permit me not to go at the right hour, and last week I go plus tard, and they say no, it is past the hour, and then I write a word and give it to the commissionaire to give to my Jean. And is it that he had the heart to forget it? mais oui, it must be so. And is it possible that mon pauvre Jean think me faithless? Ah, madam," and the poor girl sobbed and cried so bitterly that I put my arm around her and made her lean on my shoulder. She was so absorbed in the piteous idea of Jean's suffering through doubts of her love that she seemed hardly to take in the idea of his losing his arm. "His mother like she told me." Ah, non, she nevare tell me, madame, and the letter, I have not received it, non. I came away because that his mother is a [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

"She might forget her anger now that he is able to work for neither of you," said I.

Marie ceased crying and drew herself away from his arm, looking at me with a pale, hard face, as on the first occasion I had seen her.

"Ah, le pauvre ange, his arm. I forgot! Madame says he will lose it. Tell me."

I told her all about it, and of his refusal to submit to the operation.

"Mais comment! [illegible] coward," and her eyes flashed. "He [illegible] that he can not work, eh? But I can work [illegible] and I work well. I get the good wages, and if I will not work! And as you say, madame, in your kind way, one can do much with one arm, if one can not be carpentaire. Ah, how that [illegible] good [illegible] it is the left arm [illegible] that he will lose."

"Come back with me now," I said, "and persuade him to have it done to-morrow morning" (I did not like to say "before it is too late"). "I will get you in, and we must hurry, for my time is nearly up."

"I will come!" said Marie, and she was ready in a moment.

I left her waiting down stairs while I went to Sister Janet, who was only too glad to obtain admittance for her, and she was soon by the bedside of her "Jean." Of course I did not hear what passed between them. When she went away Marie threw her arms around me and kissed me, and smiled with the tears running down her cheeks. The smile was one of pride and thankfulness, and the tears were for poor Jean's arm that was going to be taken off next morning. Anderson's face when I went to him did me good to see, for hope and life had come back into it.

"I've changed my mind, nurse," said he, "and I know you'll be glad to hear it;" and then he whispered: "I don't want any medicine; my girl has been enough medicine for me!"—Leisure Hours.

POULTRY MANURE.

How to Preserve This Most Valuable of all Known Fertilizers.

Poultry droppings very quickly lose their value if not carefully preserved. If the coops were cleaned daily, instead of occasionally, the gain in the value of the manure would compensate for so doing more, as the droppings contain a larger proportion of valuable matter that readily escapes than many suppose. It has been recommended to compost the droppings with dry earth; but dry earth, though an absorbent, does not wholly preserve them. Nor will plaster answer fully for that purpose. The best dry absorbent is kainit, and as it is of itself an excellent fertilizer the cost need not be considered.

It is well known that water absorbs many times its volume of ammonia, and that it quickly causes all substances in the shape of manure to decompose and change their forms and conditions. If, then, instead of keeping the droppings perfectly dry, we keep them moist with soap-suds, we not only cause them to decompose (which is really desirable), but the water absorbs and arrests the ammonia, and prevents its escape. The soap-suds combine, also, with the manure, first forming fat acids, which in turn react on the insoluble matter of the manure, and render it more available as plant food. It is not suggested to keep the droppings wet, but only moist. They may be mixed with dry earth, if preferred, with a small quantity of kainit added, the whole to be saturated with strong soap-suds, and kept moist afterwards, using additional suds as the heap increases. For this purpose a large bin or box should be provided, or barrels may be used, but under cover as a protection against rain and sun. Poultry manure and night-soil, though very rich in nitrogen, lose by exposure, and when allowed to become dry the loss is quite an item. Analysis shows this to be the case with night-soil, which seldom compares favorably with animal manure, although it is known to be produced from food that is really more nutritious than that fed to animals. If it could be preserved daily, in a fresh condition, so as to absorb and retain the liquids and volatile matter, it would give better results. The same applies to poultry droppings. If allowed to become dry under the roost, they decrease in value, but if preserved in a fresh condition much of the nutritious matter will be saved. If those who desire to save the droppings will try the method suggested, keeping them moist with strong soap-suds, the ammoniacal odor which will greet their olfactories when about to apply the manure to land will be convincing.—P. H. Jacobs, in Rural New Yorker.

QUICK GROWTH.

Early Maturity the Key-Note to Profitable Pork-Raising.

It does not require much arithmetic to demonstrate that the sooner a hog or any other animal can be brought to maturity the less will be the cost of production, as the increased consumption of food, when feeding liberally and securing the most rapid growth, can not equal the amount required to produce a given amount of growth by a sort of starvation process. Of all practices the old-fashioned one of keeping pigs on starving rations for a year or fifteen months, with the idea of doing all the fattening and growing during three months in the fall, was the most foolish. It was almost so much time and feed lost; for the light feed and slow growth of the pigs during the period named left them in such a stunted condition that they not only did not grow during the three months or less of stuffing, to which they were unused, but did not even lay on fat, as good, thrifty hogs should. The later experience of putting the early spring pig in the early winter pork, keeping up the full feeding from the time of weaning until the day of butchering, is much the more rational and profitable. These spring pigs are actually made, in these modern times, to weigh as much as the eighteen months' old hogs used to under the practice of keeping them over as "store pigs," and the pork is of better quality. Six to nine months' time and feed are saved on the pig pushed right through to maturity. These 250 to 300 pound porkers, when kept clean and fed on good, wholesome food, furnished the best kind of meat. The hams and shoulders are of just about the right size to cure well, and they are sweeter and tenderer than the hams of older and larger hogs. Early maturity is the key-note to profitable pork-raising.—National Live Stock Journal.

—A California paper says the great plateau between the Rocky mountains and the Sierras, comprising the Territory of Utah and the State of Nevada, is apparently destined to become the greatest cattle range of the country. Immense tracts of land, some embracing nearly two hundred and fifty thousand acres, have been purchased and owners of large herds in Texas and other Southwestern States are looking for ranges in this wide section of natural pasture land. The cattlemen are being crowded out of other localities by the tide of settlers.

HOME AND FARM.

—It is said that the pods of lima beans are very injurious to hogs, though they may be fed [illegible].

—Here [illegible] how much [illegible] the poultry house [illegible]

—[illegible] is the man who says the majority of the pork consumers do not want to eat [illegible] fat. A [illegible] hog from pighood to butcherhood is nearly equivalent to a chunk of lard [illegible]. More lean meat is a great desideratum.—Boston Post.

—Corn Bread Without Eggs: Two cups of corn meal, one cup of flour, two and one half cups of fresh buttermilk, two and one half teaspoonfuls of soda (that even full), one tablespoonful of salt. Beat thoroughly, add three tablespoonfuls of melted butter and bake.—The [illegible].

—In making compost the object should be to have the materials in fine condition. As compost is usually a mixture of quite a number of materials and also best when perfectly decomposed, it serves better for young plants that are tender, and is much superior to stable manure for use in flower gardens.—Prairie Farmer.

—Buttermilk Soup: Let two quarts of sweet milk come to a boil, then put in your two quarts of buttermilk, stir to keep from lumping. Have slices of bread ready to pour it over, then put a lump of butter into the kettle, stir in with six tablespoonfuls of flour, return the soup to the pot a few minutes, then dish up.—Household.

—Cold boiled ham is much more appetizing if treated in this way: Boil until within about fifteen minutes of being done, then skin it and rub all over the fat and the cut end with brown sugar, into which you have put a few drops of vinegar; then stick cloves all over it and bake in the oven for fifteen minutes. Very good for a picnic.—Toledo Blade.

—Happy is the apple grower, says the Farm Journal, who has a few acres of naturally drained side soil, mellow and porous, and deep enough to permit the roots of his trees to go down out of reach of plow, or drouth, or frost, and anchor themselves in the very depths of the earth. Such is not easy to find, and particularly in large bodies, but whenever it is found by all means give the apple a chance at it.

—The restoration of color to fabrics which from one cause or another have deteriorated in this respect has suggested various chemical applications and processes. It has been customary to employ ammonia for the purpose of neutralizing acids that have accidentally or otherwise destroyed the color of the stuffs, this being necessarily applied immediately, or the color is usually imperfectly restored. An application of chloroform has the effect of bringing out the colors as bright as ever. Plush goods and all articles dyed with aniline colors, faded from exposure to light, resume their original brightness of appearance after being sponged with chloroform; the commercial chloroform, which is less costly than the purified, answers well for this purpose.—Chicago Herald.

STRAWBERRY BEDS.

Renewing the Old Plat so That It Will Produce a Fair Crop.

The following plan of renewal as practiced by some of our best fruit-growers here is the most practical and best I have tried. It consists in turning back furrows through the plat at intervals of five or six feet, leaving a strip eight to twelve inches wide, according to the number of plants it contains, between each back-furrow. This strip is then carefully hoed and thinned, leaving one plant as near as practicable to every twelve inches in the row, being careful to disturb the roots of those left as little as possible.

The plowing should be done soon as the crop is harvested, and if so done the back-furrows may be left three or four days before cultivating, when it should be thoroughly cultivated down, the roots raked off and replaced with fine manure. Cultivation should continue at intervals, and the runners be allowed to take root as in spring planting.

If renewal or renovation of the plat has been neglected until autumn it is better to mow and rake off the plants and weeds before plowing, then plow shallow and make the back-furrows narrow, leaving the rows not more than three or four feet apart, and more plants in the row, as the chances are that they will not have time, after this date, to spread enough for a remunerative crop, if the rows are left the usual distance apart. In all cases the space between the rows should be kept clean and open wide enough for pickers to pass without treading on the fruit. Soon as the plants are hoed, clean out all roots of plants and weeds from the back-furrows and cart them off either to the compost heap or use them as a mulch for the raspberries. Follow with a good coat of well-rotted manure and shallow cultivation, often as necessary to keep the ground clear from weeds and the surface mellow.

Strong growers like Crescent and James Vick will set plants so thickly as to choke each other and should be kept thinned. At the setting in of winter mulch with cut stalks, straw or coarse manure. Either straw or cut stalks, if not too thickly applied, need not be removed in spring. Mulch is indispensable to prevent heaving or freezing out, especially if the plants have a light growth. It helps to keep down weeds in spring, may retard the blossoming until after damaging frosts and serves to keep the fruit clean. The latter is an important item with varieties that fruit near the ground, like the Sharpless. Unlike most other plants, the strawberry is not easily smothered by winter covering.

The plan of leaving the old brush in the raspberry patch until open weather in winter or spring, has its favorable side, especially as a winter protection, but the new canes for best results should be thinned to three or four stalks to the hill. One of our most successful raspberry growers thins in May, thus securing strong canes with numerous branches for next year's fruiting.—Cor. Ohio Farmer.

An Unfortunate Family.

A Madrid paper narrates a series of fatalities to which three members out of a family of four fell victims in that city, and the story is one that seems as if it might have happened in New York. The family were flies, a brother and three sisters. They were in search of food. The eldest sister alighted upon a sausage and ate heartily. The second satisfied her hunger on some flour. The third drank with avidity from a pitcher of milk. Then they essayed to fly, but in a few moments all three fell dead. The sausage had been given its fine red color by means of a poisonous aniline dye. The flour contained a fatal percentage of plaster-of-Paris. The milk had in it so much chalk that no well-regulated fly could drink it and live. The unhappy brother, seeing himself surrounded by the corpses of his dear sisters, in his grief determined upon suicide. He launched himself upon a gray sheet of paper bearing the inscription "Fly paper—sure to kill," and sucked its deadly poison greedily; but in vain. The more he took of it the better he felt. He was doomed to live. "Fly paper" was also falsified.—N. Y. Sun.

KING PAUL I.

Death of the Sovereign of a Microscopic and Unknown Kingdom.

What schoolmaster, to say nothing of "every school-boy," knows there is a European kingdom named Tavolara lying in Mediterranean, or rather Tyrrhenian, waters, the king of which, Paul I, died only a few months ago, full of years and honors?

Off the northeast coast of the Island of Sardinia lies the much smaller Island of Tavolara, five miles long and one broad. Its possession and absolute sovereignty were formally granted by King Charles Albert, of Sardinia, to the Bertoleoni family, and for more than half a century Paul I, King of Tavolara, reigned over it in peace. On the [illegible] of May last, King Paul was compelled to go to the mainland to seek treatment for heart disease. Finding that science was powerless in his case the King returned to his island to die in the midst of his subjects, who are forty in number. He died sitting in his chair, like the Emperor Vespasian, vainly endeavoring to write a will.

He was seventy-eight years old. The forty subjects of Re Paolo, as they called him, lost in him a benevolent and industrious monarch; his family lost a kind father, and the wild goats of the island, more numerous than the King's subjects, lost—we will not say they mourn the loss of—an intrepid hunter.

Tavolara is a smaller State than either the republic of San Marino, lying east of Italy, which has twenty-two square miles and eight thousand people; the principality of Monaco, on the French coast of the Mediterranean near the Italian frontier, which has eight and one-half square miles and eight thousand five hundred inhabitants; or the republic of Andorra, lying between France and Spain, which is six hundred square miles in extent and has seven thousand people.—Youth's Companion.

SLANTING ROOFS.

A Very Plausible Story of Their Introduction by the Ancient Greeks.

To find the source from which European nations have derived the art of building in stone, we must look to the land of the Pharaohs. From Egypt the craft passed to Greece, and from the Greeks it was taken up by the Romans, to be by them disseminated through the north and west of Europe in the process of colonization. The similarity in regard to the constructive parts of the ancient Greek buildings to some of those found in Egypt of older date, affords strong confirmation of the tradition that the Greeks borrowed the art from the Egyptians. The Greeks, however, in adopting it added a new feature, the pediment, and the reason for this addition is easy to find. Egypt is practically rainless. All the protection from the climate required in a palace or temple in such a country is shelter from the sun by day and from the cold by night, and for this a flat roof, supported by walls, or pillars with architraves, is quite sufficient; but, as when in all European countries, rain has to be taken into account, a slanting roof becomes necessary. The Greeks, with their eyes for symmetry, provided for this by forming the roof with a central ridge, at an obtuse angle, from which it sloped down equally on either side. The triangular space thus formed at the end of the building above the architrave was occupied by the pediment, and this part of the facade, which owed its birth to the exigencies of climate, was thenceforth regarded as so essential to the artistic completeness of the work that it was said that if a temple were to be erected in the Celestial regions, where rain would not be possible, the pediment could not be omitted.—Popular Science Monthly.

At the end of one hour forty-four had gone down on errors. fifteen minutes more settled three more. The remaining three withstood the tests for forty-five minutes more, when two failed. 100 Doses One Dollar

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

A LAKE OF LAGER.

The Amount of Beer Drunk in Germany Last Year.

A Consul Solves the Problem of Temperance in Germany and Drunkenness in America.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Consul Tanner, of Chemnitz, reports to the Secretary of State that the beer production of Germany in 1885 was [illegible] gallons, enough to form a lake more than one mile square and six and a half feet deep, or it would make a running stream as large as some of our rivers. He says the consumption of inhabitants in Germany per head is four times as great as in the United States, yet there are [illegible] hopeless drunkards in the United States to 10 in Germany. The difference arises largely, he says, if not entirely, from the manner of drinking in vogue in the countries. "This science of drinking," he writes, "consists simply in the tardiness of drinking. All drinks are taken sip by sip, a half or three-quarters of an hour being consumed for a glass of beer. This is so simple that one is liable to ridicule for laying stress upon it, and yet on this one point hinges, in my opinion, a question of vast importance to Americans. By this manner of drinking the blood is aroused to greater activity in so gradual a manner that there is no violent derangement of the animal economy. By slow drinking the German accomplishes the object of drinking, and gives his animal economy a chance to say 'hold, enough,' which only slow drinking will do." Mr. Tanner says that since his arrival in Germany he has his "first glass of water to see drunk."

TWO POLLEYS KILLED.

How John Got His Gun Out and Defended His Home.

Brainerd, Minn., Sept. 27.—A cabin on a Government claim near this city, was yesterday the scene of a double murder, committed by the claim owner, named John Davenport, whose story, however, is all that is yet known, as he has come here and surrendered himself to the authorities. He says that two men named Polley, father and son, came to his cabin after church yesterday to drive him from his claim, that a fight ensued, and in it his wife was struck by one of the Polleys, whereupon he mounted the cabin loft, got his rifle, and shot both Polleys dead. Davenport is in jail here awaiting the officers of the adjoining county, in which the crime was committed.

Stamping Out Pleuro-pneumonia.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Commissioner Colman, of the Government Bureau of Agriculture, writes concerning his efforts to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia among cattle: "We did not get through Congress the bill we expected to pass on this subject, so we can only second the efforts of the State authorities, and assist in carrying out the State laws. Under existing law we can only stamp out the disease in a State with the permission of the local authorities. Sometimes the Governor of the State will not consent to Federal interference, so we can only second their efforts."

Another Shock at Charleston.

Charleston, S. C., Sept. 27.—A slight earthquake shock was felt here at 5:02 this afternoon, accompanied by a loud rumbling sound. The wave moved from north to south. The shock lasted about two seconds. Houses were shaken perceptibly and a number of persons rushed into the streets. No damage was done beyond the falling of loose plastering. The same shock was felt at Savannah, Ga., Summerville, Orangeburg, Camden, Graniteville, Hopkins, Kingville and Ten-mile Hill.

Signed the Pledge and Fell Dead.

New York, Sept. 27.—Matthew Dowd, a well-known citizen of Elizabeth, N. J., and a member of the Red Ribbon Club, signed the temperance pledge at the rooms of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at the corner of Third and Fulton streets yesterday afternoon, and immediately dropped dead. Dowd had been drinking rather heavily for some time, and went to the meeting of the Union for the special purpose of signing the pledge.

Smart Alecks to be Prosecuted.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 27.—Initiatory steps have been taken looking to the prosecution of the parties who sent bogus reports concerning the alleged new fishery treaty. Their offense is indictable and in consequence of the popular indignation over the numerous impositions practiced lately it seems that the industry is to be put an end to, for a time at least.

Another Bond Call.

Washington, Sept. 27.—The acting Secretary of the Treasury this afternoon issued the 143d call for the redemption of bonds. This call is for $15,000,000 of the three per cent. loan of 1882, payable on the first day of November, 1883, and interest on said bonds will cease on that day.

Dangerous to Europe's Peace.

Constantinople, Sept. 27.—Turkey's agents abroad report that the peace of Europe is endangered by the present temper of the British and Austrian Cabinets against Russia.

—Henry Blevins, of Poplar Bluff, Mo., while squirrel hunting heard a pig squeal as if in great distress. He went toward the sound and saw a big bear just in the act of squeezing the last squeal out of poor piggy. Mr. Blevin's gun was not loaded for 'b'ar, but he found in his pocket a No. 1 buckshot. This he rolled in paper until the wad just fitted the gun, rammed it home on top of the squirrel shot, aimed at the bear's head and pulled the trigger. The aim was true, the buckshot did its work and the bear fell dead.

—There is said to be good authority for saying that in Italy earthquake insurance has been practiced for many years, and it is possible that it may be transplanted here, as tornado insurance has been brought from the West to the Atlantic Coast.—N. Y. Post.

STRUCK AT A CROSSING.

Two Women Killed and a Man Fatally Injured on Their Way Home From Church.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 26.—About eleven o'clock this morning a shocking accident occurred on the New York, Providence and Boston railroad at the village of Poquonnock, Conn. Benj. Gardener, a farmer, his wife and the wife of their son James, while on their return from meeting in a wagon, were struck by a west-bound express train going at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The horse was killed and the wagon broken into kindling wood. Mr. Gardener was hurled forty feet from the crossing, receiving fatal injuries. His wife was killed outright, and Mrs. James Gardener died before she could be removed. The accident happened at a crossing just west of a culvert, a short distance from Mossuck, and as the railroad is banked up at that place the engineer, Charles [illegible], did not see the party until within twenty yards of the crossing.

Prehistoric Discovery in Wisconsin.

Kaukauna, Wis., Sept. 26.—Workmen engaged in excavating a sewer came upon the ruins of a stone building at a depth of eight feet. The stone first found bore traces of fine workmanship and polish. Further digging developed a quantity of ashes, about twenty-five bushels of which were removed, when another wall was struck. The stones were finely faced, some being blackened as if by fire and smoke; others must have been subjected to great artificial heat, as they had crumbled into lime. The work was found but a foot or two above bed rock, and shows evidences of workmanship that could have been performed only by a highly civilized race. It must have been done centuries ago, as a large elm tree had grown over the ruins. The discovery has led to the advancement of many theories.

Killed While Playing at Being Dead.

Boston, Sept. 26.—Willie Lowden, aged eight years, whose parents live in the Hotel Baldwin, on Northampton street, died today in great agony from injuries inflicted by older boys while at play. Willie was playing at being dead, and an excavation in the sidewalk served as a grave. His companions lowered him into this and placed a heavy block of paving granite upon his stomach. While he was in this situation and unable to help himself they jumped upon the block until Willie's body was covered with bruises. During the sickness which followed the boy was etherized and his stomach opened, when it was ascertained that recovery was impossible.

Child Killed and Partly Devoured by Rats.

Shelbyville, Ill., Sept. 26.—Wm. Reynolds, a farmer living five miles north of this place, has just lost his child, six months of age, in a most terrible manner. The infant was placed in its crib in a room occupied by its parents. A lady in an adjoining room heard the child cry near morning, but supposing the parents were awake said nothing. In the morning Mrs. Reynolds discovered that her babe was dead. Rats, which are very numerous about the premises, had killed the child and literally denuded the bones of the face, and otherwise terribly mutilated the body.

Women Play Ball for the Church.

Bradford, Pa., Sept. 26.—One of the most novel and interesting ball games of the season was played at Gilmore yesterday afternoon between teams of married and single ladies. The women took this method to raise money for the church. Six hundred persons saw the game. The ladies all wore long dresses, and gave a good exhibition. Seven innings were played, the married defeating the single women by a score of twenty-five to seventeen. The decisions of the lady umpire were not seriously disputed.

Roasted to Death on a Cook-Stove.

Shelbyville, Ill., Sept. 26.—Mrs. Andrew Chrisenburg, a resident of Okaw Township, last Wednesday while alone was seized with an epileptic attack, and, falling upon a cook-stove, was literally roasted to death. In extricating herself, when consciousness returned, large pieces of flesh still adhered to the stove. She died in terrible agony this morning.

A Curious Display of Electricity.

Waupaca, Wis., Sept. 26.—An interesting electrical display was witnessed here during a severe thunderstorm. The electric light wires which run along Main street were so heavily charged with electricity that large balls of fire were seen hanging or suspended in the air just below them. Occasionally one would explode, and a number of persons in the vicinity received severe shocks.

A Locomotive Boiler Explodes.

Baltimore, Sept. 26.—The engine attached to the Baltimore & Ohio train from New York burst her boiler about a mile outside the city. The engine was completely wrecked and the baggage and smoking-cars telescoped. Fireman Charles Lizer was scalded fatally and Engineer Jeremiah Morningster was badly injured.

Fatally Beaten By Drunken Brutes.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 26.—Four drunken men assaulted Jacob Pesch, an inoffensive German, this morning about two o'clock, and beat him so badly that no hopes are entertained of his recovery. Pesch was sitting on the front steps of his residence, when the men came up and attacked him without any cause. The assailants were arrested.

The Treaty a Hoax.

Washington, Sept. 26.—The fishery treaty telegraphed from Ottawa turns out to be a joke. It is a rehash of the treaty of 1854. The fourth section of the treaty of that year seems to have been taken by the inventor of the treaty of to-day.

Revenge of a Colored Servant.

Mexico, Mo., Sept. 26.—Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Miller and Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Gilds, who live ten miles southwest of here, became violently ill yesterday morning from the effects of poisoned victuals eaten at breakfast. An antidote was administered and all are now out of danger. The general supposition is that a fourteen-year-old colored girl, who is employed in the capacity of a nurse to Mrs. Miller, administered the poison. She was punished a few days ago, and has been in bad humor about it.

HERE IT IS.

New Treaty Between the United States and Canada.

The Fisheries Dispute Between the Two Countries Settled.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—The Daily News this morning prints a special dispatch from Boston giving what purports to be a synopsis of the much talked-of treaty said to have been arranged between Canada and the United States. The first clause of the treaty gives American fishermen the liberty to take every kind of fish except shell fish on the coast, as well as in the bays, harbors and creeks of Canada and to the adjacent islands, without restriction as to distance. It also gives them the right to land for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish, providing they arrange with the owners of the property they may use and do not interfere with the British fishermen. The shad and salmon fisheries and all rivers are reserved for British fishermen. Article 2 gives British fishermen the same rights and privileges on the western shores and coasts north of the thirty-sixth parallel. Article 3 admits free of duty into each country the following articles: Grain, flour and breadstuffs of all kinds, fresh cured and smoked meats, fish of all kinds, fresh or salted, undried fruits, cotton, wool, seeds and vegetables, oil of all kinds, products of fish and poultry, eggs, hides, tanned skins, furs, skins or tails undressed, stone or marble in crude or finished state, butter, cheese, tallow, lard, horns, manure, salt, ore of metals of all kinds, coal, pitch, turpentine, ashes, timber and lumber of every kind, manufactured in whole or in part, boots and shoes, agricultural implements or farming tools, firewoods, plants, shrubs or trees, cotton or wooden goods of all kinds, when manufactured in clothing, fish-oil, broom corn and bark, unmanufactured tobacco, rags, flax, hemp and tow, unmanufactured, dye stuffs of all kinds, gypsum, ground or unground, hewn or unwrought burrs or grindstones, wooden, china or earthenware, books, music, compositions, prints and sculpture, rice and raw cotton. Article 5 gives United States citizens the right to navigate and use the river St. Lawrence and canals in Canada the same as British subjects, and allows British subjects the same right on Lake Michigan. Article 6 extends the scope of the other articles to Newfoundland, so far as applicable to that colony, if the Provincial Parliament and the United States Government pass the necessary laws to carry it into effect. The treaty is to take effect as soon as the laws requiring it shall have been passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, of the Provincial Parliament of Colonies and the Congress of the United States. Such assent having been given, the treaty is to remain in force twenty years, after which it may be terminated by giving one year's notice by either party.

Wizzard Wiggins.

Washington, Sept. 24.—The Washington scientists have combined against Wiggins. They all agree in pronouncing him a crank—a person of no scientific attainments, without a knowledge of the first elementary principles of physics, without standing among scientists and without credit among sensible men. "If he is entitled to any name besides that of crank, it is astrologer. His ways are the ways of the astrologers of the dark ages. But he has not wit or learning enough to be classed even as an astrologer. Scientist he is not."

Chicago Packing Interests.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—The Illinois Live Stock Commission to-day decided to kill all the diseased cattle now in the Phoenix and Shufeldt distilleries at Chicago and sell all healthy cattle to the highest bidder. President Sherman, of the Stock Yards, protested in vain that millions would be lost to the packing interests if the report went out that beef from the infected distilleries was being shipped from Chicago.

A charge of dynamite had been fired, and the foreman, William Apple, and two workmen, Felix Basse and Frank Blackburn, descended to observe the result of the blast. They had scarcely entered the mine, however, when a mass of rock fell, instantly killing Basse and Blackburn. Apple was badly injured.

MORE DESTRUCTION

Prophesied by a Crazy Negro at Chattanooga.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 23.—A negro by the name of Richmond Reese has appeared in this city and created a great sensation in predicting the destruction of the city by nineteen earthquakes. He has chosen the summit of Cameron Hill as his rostrum and appears there each evening at seven o'clock. The hill rises two hundred feet above the city, built around its base. On the summit is an old fort, a flagstaff and a pine thicket. The hill is too high for residence sites, and is therefore lonely and uninhabited. Last Thursday evening a voice was heard up there in the darkness calling loudly, as if in earnest prayer. It was repeated the next night, and officers went up to make an inspection. When they approached the man disappeared in the thicket. This happened each succeeding night, and he seemed to have the powers of disappearing like a will-o'-the-wisp, and puzzling his pursuers. Monday night he aroused the whole neighborhood for squares around by calling: "Flee for your lives; destruction is at hand!" He was chased and stoned, but escaped again in the thicket. Stories of his prophecies were spread abroad, and when darkness settled down over the hill last night hundreds of people quietly wended their way up the slopes. The town clock struck the hour, and when the reverberations died away behind the hills the voice of the mysterious man was heard. The spectators approached gradually nearer, and then formed a circle around the speaker. He did not seem to be disconcerted by their appearance, and continued preaching at the top of his voice. He predicted the destruction of the city, the overthrow of Lookout Mountain, and the opening of the earth from the Atlantic to the Pacific. "I am a messenger of God," said he. "There are to be nineteen earthquakes; one has already come. Four stars will fall, one in the South, one in the East, one in the North, one in the West, and then the earthquake will begin." Great excitement exists among the negroes here, and many revivals are being held.

BLAZING OIL.

Several Tanks at Lima, O., Fired by Lightning—Electric Storm the Most Terrific on Record in that Section.

Lima, O., Sept., 23.—This morning at 7 o'clock our city was startled by a terrific clap of thunder. In a few moments black clouds of smoke were seen rolling up from one of the oil-wells on the Brotherton land. The fire at once communicated with the tank, and in a few minutes oil was on fire. At the same time the gas in the tank 300 yards west ignited. The wells, all the machinery, tanks, and about 2,400 barrels of oil were consumed. At 1 o'clock p. m., the derrick at the gas-works was struck, consuming the entire structure, machinery and tanks, and 1,200 barrels of oil. This well is adjoining the gas-works, which at one time was in great danger, but the gas-works and all machinery connected therewith are saved. The railroad bridge was on fire several times, caused by oil running down, but was saved without much damage. About that time high columns of black smoke were seen southeast from the city, and five wells are reported struck by lightning and destroyed: Hogle No. 2, Shackey, McLain, Holmes and Bowman. Rain has been falling in torrents. The thunder and lightning has exceeded any thing of the kind known here. The loss to the oil men thus far is estimated at $25,000. Mrs. Henderson, standing in the doorway of her home, near the first well struck, was hit by the same bolt and instantly killed. Reports of damage by lightning at several places in this vicinity have been received. At Bluffton the Eastern & Western Narrow Gauge railroad depot was struck by lightning and totally destroyed. At Beaver Dam the Lake Erie & Western railroad depot was badly damaged. At Spicerville Charles Hoover's barn was destroyed, and many barns and out-houses are reported to have been destroyed in the vicinity of Linn.

THE GREAT CATTLE PLAGUE.

A General Slaughter of Affected Cattle Agreed Upon—Protest From Chicago Live Stock Dealers.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 23.—The State Live Stock Commission held a long meeting with closed doors this afternoon and evening and discussed the disposition of the cattle affected with the pleuro-pneumonia in the Chicago distilleries. Governor Oglesby, Attorney-General Hunt, and Dr. Rauch, of the State Board of Health, took part in the proceedings. They agree with the Board and the veterinarians that the only safe thing to do would be, to destroy all the animals that had been exposed or were affected. The cattle now quarantined in the Phoenix and Shufeldt distilleries, numbering 2,000, will be slaughtered and either cremated or sent to the rendering establishments. The live stock men protest against the action.

Natural Gas Did It.

Pekin, Ill., Sept. 21.—The explosion of a gas stove in the summer kitchen of T. Haineline, a wealthy farmer living near Hopedale, this county, Sunday evening, resulted in the death of Mrs. Haineline and serious injury to Miss Ling, a teacher stopping with the family. Some time ago Mr. Haineline discovered a natural gas well on his farm and had connected it with the house in order to utilize the gas. When Mrs. Haineline went to prepare supper she touched a match to the stove as usual, when an explosion immediately followed, demolishing the kitchen and burning her so severely that she died in great agony last night. It is feared that Miss Ling will not recover.

Russian War Preparations.

Berlin, Sept. 23.—The Vossiche Zeitung says that General Gourko has ordered each brigade in Warsaw, Courland and Livonia to hold itself in readiness to start for the south at a day's notice; also that each brigade has been instructed to have four cannon ready for transportation.

Brooks' Execution Postponed.

St. Louis, Sept. 23.—In the Criminal Court to-day the dates fixed for the execution of Hugh M. Brooks, alias Walter H. Lennox Maxwell, the chloroformer, and Chio Chiagnck and Che Goom, the Chinese Highbinders, were postponed, the former for sixty and the latter for thirty days, in order to allow a transcript of the cases to be made before the appeals are taken to the Supreme Court.

The Cholera Marching On.

Budapest, Sept. 23.—Cholera has broken out among the soldiers in the Central Barracks here, and a general flight from the city of the wealthier inhabitants has begun.

Raging Down in Texas.

Victoria, Texas, Sept. 23.—Telegrams from Indianola are to the effect that a heavy storm is raging there. The wind is reported at fifty miles an hour, and the streets are three feet under water. Efforts are in progress to remove the few inhabitants still there to higher ground. The telegraph operator moved his office to a box-car four miles this side of Indianola. No loss of life is anticipated, and as but little remains there in the way of property, no serious damage is likely to occur.

Killed by a Horse.

Georgetown, Pa., Sept. 23.—Charles Poe was kicked in the stomach by a horse, receiving injuries from which he died to-day.

Caught by a Revolving Shaft.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 23.—Thomas Hopper, aged about fourteen years, employed by the Pittsburgh Manufacturing Company at Twenty-eighth street, was fatally injured about five o'clock this evening. Hopper was standing near a revolving shaft, when his apron was caught by some projection, and he was whirled around the shaft four times before the machinery could be stopped. The lad was released from his predicament and a doctor summoned. Before examination it was found both the boy's thighs and left arm were broken and his skull fractured. The surgeon removed fifteen pieces of broken bones from his head before trephining the skull. Hopper was removed to his home. He can not recover.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

There has been no improvement whatever in the tone or tendencies of the market, except that somewhat more evenness of prices has been produced in the specially depressed grades recently by sharply reduced offerings. This had the effect of bracing the market somewhat, but not of raising it in any degree. The nondescript and mongrel grades and indeed some lines of common and low medium leaf, sound and dry, but of common texture have sold as low probably as any prices paid in twenty-five years. Included in this specially depressed category is dry Green river leaf. Low grade Burley, as well as dark tobaccos, have been irregularly favorable to buyers, but the quotations of neither these nor any other grades can be lowered, as the only difference is there is a nearer approach of off grades to the extreme inside limits of prices. In the meanwhile both types, from and including good medium up, have been offered sparingly and have sold at full prices—resales of rejected tobacco showing greater or less gains in all cases. Confidence in the upper half of the grade categories of both types, but especially of Burley, is gradually strengthening. There are very favorable reports from the crop, though complaints are coming in to the effect that the warm and moist weather of the week has been better adapted to putting sap into the plants than gum. Cutting has been delayed somewhat, but it is making good progress, especially east of Louisville, where perhaps 50 per cent. of the crop has been safely harvested. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows for full weight packages:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.

Miscellaneous Items.

A post office has been established at Mammoth Cave, with W. C. Comstock as postmaster.

Acting Secretary Fairchild has approved the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the abatement of taxes amounting to about $75,000, which it was proposed to assess against John G. Roach, of Uniontown, on account of about eighty thousand gallons of whisky, which were destroyed by the burning of his distillery warehouse, in October, 1884.

The trial of Leslie Sharp for the murder of Elisha Lay, December 25, 1884, in the Circuit Court at Danville, resulted in a verdict of not guilty.

While two negro boys of Owenton, aged respective eighteen and seven years, were examining an improved Smith & Wesson pistol, it was discharged, striking the seven-year-old boy on the cranium, making only a slight flesh wound. The ball was made flat by striking the boy's skull, and was of the shape of a silver quarter. The physicians think it wonderful for such a small boy to have so thick a skull.

The child in the penitentiary at Frankfort, born within the walls to a convict mother, imprisoned for life as a murderess, will be sent to the relatives of the mother in Union County, by whom it will be raised. Its mother has rejected an offer from other parties to adopt her unfortunate offspring.

Pingree W. Brasher, a merchant of Casky, Christian County, attempted to commit suicide the other evening by shooting himself in the head with a pistol. His physician thinks he will recover.

W. H. Rose, dealer in clothing, Nicholasville, has assigned for the benefit of his creditors. Liabilities unknown, assets $10,000.

Rev. P. H. Kennedy, the pastor of the First Baptist Church (colored) of Henderson, wants to be Chaplain of the 25th United States Infantry.

A probably fatal shooting affray occurred at Georgetown the other evening between Dillard Craig and a negro named Taylor Johnson, in which Craig shot Johnson three times, in the shoulder, arm and bowels. The difficulty arose over a law-suit, in which Johnson was defeated. Mr. Craig is a son of Captain Newton Craig, who has often represented the county in the Legislature, and was for many years warden of the State Prison.

The waif that was found on the door-step of Mr. Sim Payne, near Frankfort, some weeks ago, died in Frankfort a few nights ago. It was said to have been a beautiful child, indicating in its refined and delicate features the offspring of a couple reared in the midst of a softened and luxurious state of circumstances, and not under the toil and privations of the life of the average yeoman.

George Hull, Jasper Simpson, Josh Ingrams and young King, while drunk went to the residence of J. L. Jump, the other night, and because he (Jump) would not drink with them began abusing him and his family. Jump, seeing that nothing would do but a fight, went to a neighbor's and procured a gun and, returning, fired on his abusers, mortally wounding Hull and Simpson. Jump had at one time been a drinking man and an associate of the wounded men, but recently joined the church and was trying to lead a better life. The men were neighbors and had always been the best of friends. All the parties live near Holbrook, Grant County, and about twelve miles from Owenton. Up to the 21st Jump was not arrested.

A heavy wind and hail-storm passed over the western portion of Montgomery County the other night, doing much damage to farm property and crops. Two large tobacco barns on the farm of E. S. Cunningham, near Thompson Station, were blown down, killing several head of cattle and crippling two horses. A third barn was considerably damaged. The barns were full of tobacco, which will be a total loss. A portion of the roof of his dwelling was lifted off and carried away by the wind. The barns are covered by insurance. Colonel H. P. Thompson lost about fifteen acres of tobacco by the hail. All the fencing and timber in the track of the storm is a total wreck.

Scott Miller, an iron-worker employed on the new Licking bridge, Newport, met with a serious and probably fatal accident the other evening. While fixing a truss one of the iron rods fell, striking the man across the back, breaking it. He came from New York to work on the bridge.

At Louisville Jim Gorley shot Policeman Ellis in the hip and sent a ball through the body of Patrick Grimes, keeper of the Clay street police station. Gorley was drunk and made the assault for no reason at all. Ellis is not seriously hurt, but Grimes is badly wounded.

The Central Kentucky News has been sold to B. G. Mullins, and, it is rumored, will take up the cause of Prohibition.

The following postmasters were appointed the other day for Kentucky: J. H. Shumate, Eadston, Rowan County; J. R. Crain, Hillsborough, Fleming County.

Coroner Q. J. Crawl held an inquest on the body of the negro who was murdered midway between Nicholasville and Lexington on the railroad. The throat was cut and two shots had been fired into the body. He could not be identified. The body had been in the cornfield for several days, and could not have belonged to Hall's circus.

HOWLING AT DEMOCRACY.

Failing to Injure the President, Republican Hounds Fiercely Attack the Administration and Utter Their [illegible] Notes.

The friends of honest government, who have watched with interest the course of the Democratic Administration, can not but be particularly impressed by the venomous character of the opposition. The work of reform has been fought at every point, and the batteries of slander and misrepresentation have not been idle for a moment. The enemies of the Administration resemble a pack of hounds in full cry, always on a false scent, but none the less persistent in their work. They brayed at the President until even their throats became hoarse, and desisted for a time only when they found that they were adding immeasurably to his popularity. Every thing that malice could suggest and hatred furnish was set forth in the columns of the coyote journals, some of which put on the disguise of Democracy to render their attacks the more deadly, to injure the President in the estimation of the public. But Mr. Cleveland was proof against all assaults, and the disgust of the public towards his assailants was so plainly manifested that many of them gave up the fight in despair. Then they endeavored to injure the Administration by attacking each member of the Cabinet in turn. The Secretary of the Navy was for a time the object of their combined assaults because he chose, in the interest of honest government, to cleanse the department from the corruption and knavery which prevailed in it from the days of Robeson and to drive away the band of thieves who had so long been robbing the Government under the pretense of repairing old ships and fulfilling contracts obtained by fraud.

The misleading statements of the reduction of the public debt, by which Republican Administrations were enabled to make a favorable showing before the people, were so completely exposed by the new form adopted by the Democratic Administration of the Treasury Department, a truthful, comprehensive, intelligible and business-like statement, that the coyote pack turned savagely on the department, ceasing from their attacks only when they found how utterly fruitless they were. The firm stand taken by the Postmaster-General against the dictation of the Pacific Mail lobby drew on him for a time the fury of the howling pack, the lobby acting as whippers-in. Then their venom and malignity were displayed against Attorney-General Garland, whose high reputation and sterling integrity formed an inseparable barrier to their efforts against the Law Department of the Administration. Here again they were foiled by the manly, straightforward, explicit explanation of the telephone business by Mr. Garland, an explanation which fully acquitted him in the estimation of all fair-minded citizens from the lying charges brought by the enemies of the Administration. On Secretary Lamar's department the most determined attack was made. The Pension Bureau was such a valuable adjunct to the Republican National Committee during the campaign of 1884, when that zealous, unscrupulous partisan, Dudley, was in command of it, that the enemies of honest government could not permit the sweeping reforms instituted by the gallant Union veteran, General Black, ridding the bureau of the corruption and fraud with which it was permeated, pass without an exhibition of their venom. They had traded upon the most sacred feelings of the American people, their gratitude towards the saviors of the Union, so long and found it so convenient to pay off political debts by filling the pension lists with the names of people who had no right or title to pensions, that they fiercely resented the interference of General Black with their schemes.—Albany Argus.

A True Parallel.

The Republican party is catching it from all sides. It is hard to say any thing sensible nowadays without hitting that organization a back-handed lick in some part of its anatomy. Mons. Henri Rochefort, in discussing "Republicanism in France," gives it a left-hander square on the nose. He says:

"Political parties have at least one trait in common with dramatic writers—that is their extreme repugnance to recognize that almost always their defeats should be laid to their own faults. It is extremely rare, indeed, for an author to explain his want of success otherwise than as due to the incapability of the actors, or to the rain or snow, or to excessive heat, or to some other climatic condition apt to exert an unfavorable influence on the public. Undoubtedly it would be much simpler to admit that the piece was hissed solely because it was poor; but that is the last explanation of which the unfortunate playwright will dream. In the same way parties, when they behold public opinion abandoning them, never look upon this general defection as a direct consequence of their own detestable policy; on the contrary, they exert all their ingenuity to discover remote causes, of a machiavelic and most complicated nature, and thus free themselves from the necessity of admitting their own errors and allow themselves to continue in them."

This is as true in America as it is in France. It is strikingly true of the Republican party now. It attributes its losses to every cause but the true one—namely, its own bad policies and purposes.—Des Moines Leader.

"High-Minded" Criticism.

The Republicans, finding no legitimate cause for the criticism of President Cleveland, are driven to straits which create almost as much amusement as they do disgust. Here are samples from the Commercial:

> "The President thinks he is before the country in the act of heroic adventure when he sits in a wagon or boat and is pulled or hauled thirty or forty miles a day through country roads or on alleged lakes."
> * * * * * * *
> "The President is having his ponderous person hauled over mountain roads and through mountain lakes, in the idea that the Nation is gaining strength by the resting of the meat on his lazy bones."

The President is taking such a brief annual vacation as is usually allotted to every hard-working employe. He, like many intelligent men, prefers to get his rest on a fishing trip. He has his wife and his wife's mother with him. To the utmost of his power he has made the trip a thoroughly quiet and unostentatious one. We modestly submit that such stuff as that quoted above is a disgrace to American citizenship.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

PRESS POINTS.

—They are now calling him James [illegible] Blaine.—Albany Argus.

—General Logan might have taken part in the Maine campaign if he had been an enthusiastic Blaine man, but the fact is that John A. is a Logan man now.—Chicago Herald.

—The Connecticut Republicans made an open proclamation that they had a hard road to travel when they nominated the president of a New York bank for Governor.—Detroit Free Press.

—Mr. Blaine will insist on having his own way, we presume, and so long as the Republican party is in a moral condition to accept him it will make no particular difference who is its candidate.—N. Y. Times.

—The new Democratic campaign hand-book will prove a most disagreeable surprise to those Republican organs which have made merry at times over the words of the late Vice-President Hendricks: "We need to have the books in the Government offices opened for examination."—Albany Argus.

—Senator Platt, of Connecticut, says that all a Democratic Administration has done in two years has been to bankrupt "poor John Roach." The last of John's fat campaign contributions, stolen from the pockets of the people, makes the average Republican politician very sorrowful.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—It has leaked out that Mr. Blaine is very angry with Senator Frye on account of the sharp thrust the latter gave him while playing with the edged tools of rhetoric. The Plumed Knight has been unable to conceal his chagrin over his reckless language of his volatile lieutenant, who has damaged him far more than did the comparatively harmless Dr. Burchard. There has been some very candid correspondence on the subject between the two men, and the Senator has resorted to the defence which his chief fell back upon in his Portland speech early in the summer—that he was misreported. In Senator Frye's case the excuse is palpably false. The point was not only the most prominent in his speech here, but it was repeated in the same language in two subsequent speeches.—N. Y. Sun.

—The enfranchisement of slaves was originally approved by certain partisan leaders as a political measure. Those men were stupid enough to overlook the fact that an early result of their proteges' new-born citizenhood would be the development of their intellectual freedom. With that improvement came the capacity to think and act, which effects a realization of the truth that the best safeguard to human liberty is independence of thought and action within the law. The chief benefit to be derived from the privilege of the ballot is the power it imparts to the elector to have a free voice in the selection of leaders. If a voter were to be denied that he would become a political serf, a tool in the hands of designing men. And the very fact that the colored man is rapidly attaining to a position of independence is what troubles some of his professed friends.—Chicago News.

A Republican Ornament.

John P. Evans, pardoned by Governor Foraker and released from the Ohio penitentiary where he had just commenced serving a sentence for ballot-box stuffing, points a moral and adorns a Republican tale. The whole thing is characteristic of Bob Kennedy, the Rump, and Foraker, the chief engineer of the dirty partisan business. Evans is remembered by the writer, in his wild and incoherent testimony before the Legislature Investigation Committee, as a witness to whom lying was a mere pastime, and perjury a welcome employment. He was both formally and informally impeached, flatly contradicted by reputable witnesses, the testimony of the ballot-box itself, and completely broken down on cross-examination. A more pitiful and disgusting spectacle of perjury exposed was never witnessed. It even sickened Governor Noyes, one of the counsel for the contestors, and yet to manufacture capital for the Republican party of Ohio this convicted perjurer, upon an evident agreement with the Governor of our State, went before the Hamilton grand jury, repeated his lying statement, was convicted, and promptly, according to contract, made the subject of Executive clemency. To this dirty complexion the Republican party of Ohio, under the leadership of Foraker, has come at last.—Toledo Times.

Some Cold and Blighting Figures.

The cold figures of the returns are as blighting to Mr. Blaine's hopes for 1888 as were the fateful 1,149 which told, in 1884, that he had then lost all in losing New York. He has deliberately and even ostentatiously invited the result of this State election as a criterion of his strength; and to the end that it should be a sweeping victory—not for the Republican candidates, whose election was a foregone conclusion under any circumstances—he has vigorously participated in the campaign himself and invited assistance from every available quarter. It may be noted, parenthetically, that the failure of this invited assistance to respond is not the least significant feature of the whole affair. Logan, Sherman and Evarts, who were especially solicited, were conspicuous by their absence, and of all the other eminent speakers announced only Senator Allison, of Iowa, and John D. Long, of Massachusetts, responded. The dispatch from his own home, announcing that while "both the Republican and the Democratic vote show a falling off from that cast in 1884, yet the Republicans have suffered far more than the Democrats," ought to sound the knell of the Blaine candidacy.—Chicago News.

What They Have Done for England.

The Republican party allowed alien capitalists to become possessed of 20,747,000 acres of land in the United States in the years they held the Government after the close of the war. If the change had not come when it did there would have been no land for exemption by a citizen in a few years. The Holland Land Company alone has 4,500,000 acres in New Mexico, an English syndicate holds 3,000,000 acres in Texas, another English syndicate has 1,800,000 acres in Mississippi, and Sir Edward Reid and others claim 2,000,000 acres in Florida. The picture is not a very pleasant one for an American citizen to gaze upon, but it shows that the g. o. p. was determined that the gentry of England should have a foothold in this country even if veterans got no land.—Buffalo Times.

The canvass which the Taylor brothers are making in Tennessee is pronounced one of unprecedented excitement. They average several hours each day speaking and but in few cases have they had to exceed five hours for sleep, but they are standing the campaign well. The speeches cover every day of the campaign, and each is bending every energy to defeat the other on the stump, and the debate is growing in interest each day, and each finds the ability of the other increasing as the canvass progresses. They manifest a sincere interest in the personal welfare of each other, and little brotherly acts of kindness mark their intercourse.

At the meeting of the county commissioners last Wednesday, the proposition to work the prisoners hereafter confined in jail as a punishment for misdemeanors, was discussed and met the approval of the commissioners. A rock pile will be provided and when a prisoner is sent to jail to serve out a fine, he will be anchored to a rock pile with a ball and chain. The rock thus broken will be sold to the turnpikes. This move will be endorsed by the people, and will have a tendency to diminish the number of misdemeanor prisoners confined in jail in the course of a year.

The county commissioners see the necessity of having the accommodations about the Infirmary that such an institution requires, and have taken steps looking toward the building of a fruit-house, a building which is an actual necessity, as there is no cellar under any part of the main building, and without something of the kind the county is considerably the loser.

Yesterday among our mail was a very small and neatly wrapped little package, which, at first, we took to be a postage stamp, but upon investigation it turned out to be the Licking Valley Scorcher. Though small it was very loud.

It is contended that Wiggins, the would-be weather prophet, is an ignoramus, besides being a regular, genuine weather crank. But if his earthquake should come to time to-day, he will be decidedly the biggest frog in the pond.

The city of Covington is getting worked up again on the water question. When political excitement runs down in Covington they fall back on the water question and discuss it until it has to give way to politics.

Next Wednesday Frankfort will celebrate her centennial. Arrangments are being made for the grandest day in the history of the town. Visitors will be there from all points of the State and participate in the festivities.

The President's very pleasant fishing excursion is being followed by the endorsement of the Democratic Congressional conventions as rapidly as they meet, consequently he ought now sleep well of nights.

Judge Morton, of Lexington, declines to enter the race for Governor, but there are yet enough candidates left on the track to make the contest mighty warm and surrounded with uncertainty.

1886 TOBACCO CROP.

The old claim that woman is the most fickle character in the list of the earth is not true if vegetation is considered, for we think the tobacco plant will discount anything that can be named for fickleness. Early in the season the crop in general looked [illegible] generally [illegible] but as the few days of June and July came on a great change [illegible] was reported from most sections but particularly Virginia, North Carolina and Wisconsin. In these States the conditions went on from bad to worse, the weather appearing to be desperately flirting and coquetting with the crop until it had reduced it to a condition which its friends said it could never recover from. Too much rain and too many hot, dry days alternated in the first two mentioned States, while in the latter State hot, dry, parching weather was the rule. The crops of these States were generally reported as almost ruined, as far as quality was concerned, particularly, but behold what a transformation has occurred in a month or more.

Now reports from correspondents, exchanges, and from the chief of the agricultural departments of Virgina and North Carolina are to the effect that the crops has come out wonderfully, and that, providing frosts are late, in order to let the late tobacco (much of the crop of the States being of this class) fully mature, at least three-quarters of an average crop in quanity will be realized, and that quality will be but little less than this, and might possibly be even better, some report. In Wisconsin the crop is now acknowledged to be in far better condition than could have been anticipated, and some, who persisted a month ago in claiming that the crop could not possibly be over two-thirds as large as last year, are reluctant to admit a very material improvement, yet there are a great many, who never made as low an estimate of the crop as the above, now confident that the yield will be closer to two-thirds of last year's crop, and that Good Wrappers will not by any means be as scarce an article as was generally believed if the curing season is in any way propitious. An early heavy frost may somewhat discount the improved condition in Wisconsin, by either damaging the tobacco in the field or inducing its cutting while green, which is in every essential as bad as frost-bitten tobacco. A slight frost did occur early last week, but did no damage.

In Kentucky, Ohio and other of the Western States, a good crop will probably be housed, though a good deal of it is late tobacco, and might be materially damaged if anything like a severe frost occurred before the first week of October. In Ohio and Missouri the conditions have not been as favorable as in Kentucky, as a less acreage than usual was planted, and dry weather permanently stunted some; but, considered as a whole the States of Kentucky, Ohio, Tennessee, Indiana, Illinois, West Virginia and Missouri, will produce a crop that will be ample enough to meet the wants of the trade, though it will be smaller than either of the last two crops, and there will be no difficulty to obtain any of the various types.

In Missouri little or no White Burley was grown this year, being mostly the Export and Dark Manufacturing grades, and in Kentucky more Dark was planted than in the two years preceding; but as there was entirely too much White Burley grown for the good of its reputation and value, a moderate crop this year will be in the nature of a blessing, especially if the low grades are a minor part of the crop, as it is claimed. In the Clarksville, Hopkinsville and Nashville Districts, the crop is usually heavy and fine.

In Ohio, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New York, a fine crop of Cigar Leaf has been grown, and domestic Havana types predominate in all sections but Ohio, where a good and fine crop of Seed Leaf has been barned, and for which the Buckeye planters expect better prices than for years, as the stock and supply is comparatively meagre while there is a tendency to an increased demand for it from manufacturers. In the Cigar Leaf States the crop has been more forward (with the exception of Wisconsin) than in the Leaf States, and very little is now left standing in the fields.

Of course, the character, quality and the value of the crop can be materially changed in the curing, but every year this process is becoming more and more reduced to a science, and the danger from bad weather during the curing season is not much dreaded, except possibly in the Bright belt of Virginia, where unusual care is required to bring out the color and quality that makes this Leaf so valuable.—Cincinnati Western Tobacco-Journal.

A turpentine farm is one of the curiosities of the South. The trees are counted into crops of so many a thousand and then cut. The first run is as clear as oil, and after being dipped out with a paddle, it is distilled, and hard resin is left white and clear as glass.

The trial of the ten thousand dollar damage suit of W. V. Crawford against H. M. Winslow, in the Circuit Court occupied all of last Saturday and a portion of the day before. H. P. Montgomery and Judge Fisher represented Mr. Winslow, and Judge Major and Mr. McElrath were for Mr. Crawford. The time was spent mostly in hearing the testimony, an hour on a side being given to argument, but the jury was not out over five minutes before it returned a verdict in favor of Mr. Winslow. It will be remembered that a short time since Mr. Winslow caused the arrest of Mr. Crawford on the charge of forgery. The plaintiff alleged that it was maliciously done. The defendant denied and averred that he had probable cause to believe that Mr. C. was guilty of the crime. The jury so decided. It will be remembered that he was acquitted, however.—Carrollton Democrat.

The New York World says "the long period of depression in business seems now to be giving away to one of prosperity. Merchants and general tradesmen agree that the prospects of the fall trade are very bright. There is no boom, but a steady, healthy growth. Every one sees indications of better times. It is the universal opinion in commercial and financial circles that not only is the present condition of business better than it has been for a number of years past, but that the future is of greater promise than for a long time. The bustle and activity in the drygoods district is apparent to all who visit that part of the city. All are generally begin to feel the good times. The streets in the drygoods district are lined at night with trucks piled high with merchandise and covered with tarpaulins ready to be started at daybreak for the steamer, wharves and railroad shipping offices. The same story of activity comes in from all directions and extends to all branches of industry save the leather trade."

No party can long maintain itself on a basis of gaugers, tide-waiters, postmasters and other officials. The Democratic party lost the Presidency while in control of all the offices, and regained it while destitute of any. The Republicans came into power inspite of the bread and butter brigade, and went out notwithstanding the frantic efforts of the same force organized on their side. To live and rule, a party needs principles and honesty of them, and a policy, with the ability to give it effect.—New York World.

THE WATCH'S STORY.

Why He Was Valued by Queen Betsey and Her King.

In the pawnbroker's window where the old, multi-keyed clarionet was lying in its green frayed case and where the gold watch was hanging with its placard which told the inquisitive passer by that it had been presented by a queen, there was a silence after the watch had told its story, as our readers were informed one short fortnight ago. The queen, as the watch facetiously observed, was one of a pack of cards, not the spouse of a reigning monarch, as the clarionet at first supposed.

So when the announcement was made the clarionet felt most justly aggrieved.

"I noticed your impatient curiosity," exclaimed the watch after a pause, "and told you the wrong story. The queen that gave me to my owner wore no crown of gold. Her head was content to be crowned with golden hair, but it was in her true blue eyes that one could see her royal nature. Her life will be crowned, however, by such a crown as never was worn on an earthly monarch. She was the wife of a simple-minded engineer employed on the Straightline road, named George Martin. He used to own me, and if ever there was a queen she was one. Do you want to hear my real story?"

Of course they did, from the inquisitive clarionet up to the diamond king in its velvet-lined case. They wanted to hear it very much, so after clearing its throat the watch began.

"All the employes of the Straightline road," explained the timepiece, "excepting the firemen and engineers were on a strike, and perhaps this was what made George Martin—the husband of my queen—the engineer of the night express No. 10, button up his great coat more closely and pull down his cap more tightly as the train slowly puffed and rumbled out of Salemville and started on its long journey to Bordertown. Anyway, whatever it was, his face was paler than usual and he kept a tighter hold upon the lever as he peered into the mist and the darkness which almost hid the track before him.

"'Just such a night as No. 4 went over the bank at Long Point water tank,' he remarked to Jim, the fireman.

"'Pshaw!' returned the latter.

"'That's all right,' answered the engineer, 'but I wish I was at home with Queen Betsey and the girls all the same.'

"Then he relapsed into silence, and the train sped on, whizzing past small stations, shooting around curves and rumbling over culverts, while the engineer never for an instant lost sight of the almost invisible track which stretched out in two thread-like lines before the flying engine.

"On the side of a hill there wandered a valley, which narrowed at places so that the roadway was crowded for room. Then again it widened out into small valleys divided into meadows, wheat fields, groves and pastures while the picturesque houses of the farmers dotted the hillsides. Just at the entrance to this valley, on the first hill which guarded the way like a sentinel, was where the queen lived.

"Their lawn sloped gently to the narrow bit of woods: through the leaves in summer she could catch a glimpse of the lights of the flying train, looking like a company of will-o'-the-wisps on a race for life, so rapidly did they flash past the trees. Through the same leaves he could see the lighted lamp that the queen always left in the front window to cheer him on his lonely way. Even in that passing glimpse the lamp talked to him as only a lamp in the window can talk. It told him to hurry on: to keep a brave heart: to keep his head clear, his eyes sharp, his ears keen, and to remember always that some one was watching for him, waiting for him and praying too. The lamp did not confine itself merely to conveying messages to and fro in the gloom, like commonplace electricity, even though these messages did not come through the ears, nor through the eyes, and never reached the brain before going straight to the heart, which the most expert electrician has never yet accomplished with his subtle fluid. It had other and still more wonderful gifts, possessed by lamps in general ever since Aladdin's time; but a wise lamp, and all lamps are wise, never displays this marvelous achievement to mankind except at night time, and only then when that specimen of mankind to whom it shows this gift can see its gentle rays through the window panes of home. It must be his home, too. Its charm is broken in any other place.

"Besides the power of talking it could paint as never a mortal artist painted, since the painter's art was known. Quick as a flash, the rays which had pierced the darkness and entered the engine's cab set about with invisible paints and brushes to perform their work of magic. Their work was no sooner commenced than ended. The walls of the cab, with their dirty windows covered with grease and oil; the polished steel levers, the gauge, the bars and the wheels of the engine were gone, and in their place were neatly papered walls hung with pretty pictures; the windows were as clean as soap and water oft applied could make them, and the curtains were of spotless white. The floor was carpeted with ingrain of a neat and cheery pattern, where the sun beams liked to sport, especially when baby sported with them—a pattern that was homelike by lamplight. The picture didn't stop with this. A sweet faced woman sat in an easy chair rocking, by the side of the dying embers in the grate, for even in summer the nights are cool on the hillside. Her hair was the color of ripe corn silk and her eyes so blue and tender, so true and gentle, that even the magic first painted just a little slower when he came to this fair figure, lingering lovingly as he did his work. Then the door by his side opened, and in a crib by the side of a bed were nestled two little baby girls: their golden curls spread over the pillow with a grace that art has never learned nor ever will; their pink cheeks flushed with the warmth of their coverings and their bright eyes hidden by four little white curtains fringed with golden silk, such as no loom has ever spun, even in enchanted fairy-land, where cobweb-threads are spun by elfin weavers into clothes, colored by dyes distilled from rich rose leaves and purple violets, golden rods and peach blossoms, and fashioned into garments by domestic spirits for royalty to wear.

"The engineer sighed and the picture was gone. The walls were greasy, the floor was dirty, the night was dark and he was once more at his post of duty. It was midnight and the Long Point water tank stood up beside the lonely track like a grim and corpulent spectre. On the right of it rose the great trees of the harsh woods. On the left of the track was the ravine, whose walls were as straight as a stone could fall. The rocky bottom of this ravine was fully 200 feet below the rails, which were scarcely ten feet distant from its brink. It had always been dangerous, but the superintendent said it couldn't be helped. The river, which flowed parallel with the track, was as near the rails on the other side, and a bridge of trestle work a half a mile in length was too expensive. So the danger was unavoidable. The directors agreed with him and so did the heedless passengers who gave the dangers of their journey little thought as long as they reached their destination on time.

"The sharp eyes of George Martin saw the straight rails of the track as they came to a point in the distance. They also discerned outlined against the lesser blackness of the horizon the black outlines of the water tank. But they failed to see the four determined looking men crouched in the shadow of the woods. Neither did they see the loose dirt, freshly stirred on the track at the curve. They did not see that the rails had been moved; that they were just unfastened on the ties so that the slightest motion would scatter them like straws before the hurricane, while the train would dash with lightning speed over the embankment into the ravine below. On came the train, nearer and nearer. The four men drew closer and closer together, waited and even held their breaths in soul-consuming anxiety. In one second all would be over.

"The newspapers issued the following afternoon contained the following dispatch:

"'Express train No. 10 went over the embankment at Long Point water tank at midnight last night. Engineer Martin was in charge. There were over forty persons killed by the fall, and many others of the hundred who were on the train will die from injuries inflicted.'"

Here the watch stopped.

"Well," inquired its listeners in unison, "how did the engineer come out of the accident?"

"I almost forgot that," continued the watch. "Just as the engine was a few yards from the loosened rails he looked at me. As he did so his experienced eyes caught a glimpse of the murderous derangement. With the strength of a giant and the speed of thought he pulled back the lever reversing the engine, called to his fireman to jump, and then he jumped himself."

"I'm glad of that," observed the clarionet with a sigh of relief. "Was he hurt?"

"Not in the least. But the jar stopped me at that very second."

"How did you come here?"

"I was stolen from his bureau drawer, for after that my queen said that I should never work another day."

"Stolen?" exclaimed the clarionet, "why don't you tell the people whom you belong to?"

"Can't make them understand."

"I can tell them," bravely cried the clarionet, "and I will right off."

"Have you any watches to sell?" interrupted a voice from within the store.

"Yes," replied the pawnbroker, reaching for the relator of this tale.

"Why!" exclaimed the customer. "That's mine. It was stolen some time ago, and I can prove it."

A second later a policeman entered the door, and it was not long before the watch was stowed comfortably away in George Martin's pocket, almost breaking its case with the vehemence of its joyous ticking.

"Well!" observed the clarionet to his fellows after quiet had settled down like dust upon the collection, "I, for one, am glad."

"So are we," replied the other collaterals sincerely and in unison.

"So are we—every one."

And I think they were.—Benjamin Northrop, in N. Y. Graphic.

NOTICE.—The Annual election of officers for the Boone County Farmers Insurance Company, will be held in the company's office in Burlington on the first Monday in October, 1886. All the stockholders are earnestly requested to attend. J. H. WALTON, Secty.

The Teachers' Association met at Union last Saturday. It was late in the day before it organized for business, consequently the entire program was not completed. The next meeting will be in Burlington, the fourth Saturday in October at 10 o'clock a. m.

So far as we have heard everybody is coming to Burlington next Monday to hear the Hon. John G. Carlisle's speech. We predict there will be the largest crowd in Burlington that day that has been here for a long time. There will be some here from Indiana should the weather not be too bad.

Some of the boys will commence packing their "grips" this week preparatory to making distant friends, visits which the press of work has necessarily delayed until next week. They will not leave their address for the use of the inquisitive big sixteen which will meet during their absence.

The docket for the next term of the Circuit Court closed last Friday with 25 ordinary and 14 equity appearances. The Moore will case is the only one set for trial on Saturday the 6th day of the term. If the court keeps up with the docket it will have a week and a day which it can devote exclusively to the trial of that case.

The wind and rain storm that swept over this part of the country last Thursday about five o'clock p. m., was the most violent of the season, but no damage was done. The cloud was extremely angry looking, and at its approach the nervous inhabitant was considerably excited. The rain and wind seemed to come from all points of the compass in a short time.

At their meeting last Wednesday the County Commissioners appointed Edgar Cropper to superintend the building of a fruit-house at the County Infirmary—Commissioner Cropper was also appointed a committee to ascertain the present indebtedness of the county and what will be the probable expense for the next year. M. T. Garnett was appointed to settle with the Sheriff.

Mr. Stewart Baker and old and estimable citizen, of the Big Bone neighborhood died last Sunday after several weeks illness. The funeral was preached Monday by Elder E. Stephens, after which the remains were interred in the family cemetery. Mr. Baker was about 78 years old and had been a very successful business man. He leaves several grown children and many friends who lament his death.

The floor in the Court-house having been repaired, Mr. Cowen consented that the young folks might dance there one night before the benches and iron railing which incloses the bar, were replaced, so last Friday night they took advantage of the opportunity afforded, and enjoyed a very pleasant dance. The music was furnished by Messrs W. E Piper, R H. Sandford and Perry Cropper. Quite a number of married ladies were present the greater part of the evening.

One day last week Dr. Ionns Terrill, of the Bullittsville neighborhood, came near having his barn destroyed by fire. He was having the roof pitched and it accidently took fire from the furnace used for heating the pitch. During the excitement, the workmen who, before, could not move about on the roof without holding to ropes, skipped about as fearlessly as if they had been on terra firma. Bruce Thornton distinguished himself by his heroic effort, using his coat as a weapon with which to fight the flames. The damage was trifling.

Sunday some young men at Beaver were behaving rather boisterously when constable Coyle commanded the peace, but they refused to heed the command. Knowing the parties with whom he had to deal he went home and got his pistol, and when returning he was met by the parties and his horse was surrounded. An attempt was made to take the constable off his horse when he drew his pistol and commenced firing into the crowd. A young man named Farrell received two wounds, one on the side of his face, and one on his right side and arm. Coyle is constable in the Beaver district and his examining trial was held yesterday, the result of which we have not been advised.

Of the Government work at that point the Rising Sun Local says:

"Although the dyke has been a [illegible] of conversation since the work was begun in May 1884, comparatively few know of the details of the structure. Its total length was [illegible] feet but [illegible] feet have been added. The piles number 1,400 and have been driven eight or ten feet in the river bed the two rows forming the sides of the dyke being eight feet wide. The substructure inclosed was filled above low water, and is made of alternate layers of brush and rock. Within and upon this foundation is the crib, or dyke proper, four feet high and thirteen feet wide, the timbers drift-bolted and strengthened by dove-tailed crossties at regular distances. When completed 1,880 cords of brush will have been used, 31,000 cubic yards of stone, 325,180 feet of timber, 12 tons of iron bolts, a ton and a half of washer bolts, and 11,000 spikes. During the past few weeks the current has set in against the lower portion of the piling, and has greatly damaged their efficiency, and further work will be done to protect the dyke. The structure will be finished by the middle of next month."

The Tenth Annual Meeting of the Miami Synod, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, will be held with the Hopeful church, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 5th and 6th, 1886. Preaching every night during the week, including Sunday and Sunday night. Everybody is invited to attend these meetings, especially the Womens' Home and Foreign Missionary Meeting, which will meet at the same place.

On Thursday, October 7th, about 25 or 30 ministers of the Miama Synod, will meet at the Hopeful church to transact business for the church.

Of Shadrach Hathaway, who died in Rising Sun on the 19th inst., the Recorder says:

"Born in New Bedford, Mass., January 19, 1794, in 1815 he came to Indiana Territory, buying a log house of the proprietor of the town, on the corner of what is now Fourth and Front Sts., where he died, and had lived continuously for over 70 years. His business was that of a shoe maker, and he made the first pair of shoes made in Rising Sun or Ohio county. Five years later, to supply the wants of the growing settlement, he added a stock of general merchandise, taking in a partner. He prospered, and enlarged his business from time to time, until his establishment was perhaps the largest mercantile establishment in South-Eastern Indiana, with a branch house in Vevay, Indiana.

After the close of the war, age, with its infirmities, left its marks upon him, and the management of his extensive business affairs devolved largely upon other and less prudent heads than his. This, with the business depression and unsettled condition of affairs, swept away the accumulations of a lifetime, leaving little but the homestead, which for many years had been the property of his wife.

He soon after again went to work on the same work bench he bought in 1814 and which had been stored away for just fifty years. He continued at this taking measures and making boots and shoes to order, and especially in repairing, until spring, when failing eyesight compelled him to give up his shop and bench—to die. In these later years, when over 85 and 90 years of age, he was contented and happy, had a good or kind word for everybody, only dissatisfied when he had not work enough to do."

Mr. Hathaway was well known by many citizens of this county, and especially by the East Bend neighborhood. He was a Universalist, being the father of the church in Rising Sun.

Squire Gaines' court Monday was not overly crowded with business.

FENCE.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S

VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease, which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in the matter, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. Schwartz & Haslett, Pittsburg, Pa.
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family. Yours, &c.
J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock's" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, valuable and effectual in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

UNDER A CLOUD.

The Beautiful Heir to the House in the Woods.

"She's a beautiful, lovable and true girl."

"Yes," sighed the matron, "but she'll never find a husband."

"She certainly receives plenty of attention," I suggested, uncertain of the speaker's meaning.

"For a time, yes," was the reply. "Fortune hunters pursue her keenly until they learn the family story. And well they may, for if she lives a year longer"—

"Which is entirely probable," I ventured to interject, gazing upon the healthy glow that mantled the cheeks of the pretty girl who sat on the opposite side of the parlor.

"Nothing is unexpected in that household," commented the matron before she resumed the thread of her narrative. "If she lives another year, as I remarked, or till legal age, she will inherit $250,000—her mother's estate. When her father dies"—

"But, my dear madame, he's a hale and jolly old toper, who loves life and hangs on for all there's in it," I felt well enough acquainted to remark, parenthetically.

"True enough; but if she outlives him he'll leave her at least a million. She's the only child—that is, the only one that survives. An elder brother, a charming fellow, cut his throat last fall in a moment of suicidal impulse. Awful as was this misfortune in itself, it had a more sinister import to the father and daughter. Though you think him a jolly, reckless old man, I tell you he was not himself again for months. The young woman was crushed. Since that day she has lived as in a dream. She throws herself madly into society, but there's no forgetfulness for her. She wants to marry, naturally, but does not. A signal was given by her poor brother, and a horror always dreaded now confronts her. She's only waiting."

"Waiting? Waiting for what?"

"The development of the family taint—madness!"

With curiosity at fever-heat I then learned the whole sad story. It is a pitiable tale, and it seems hardly fit that we, who have chatted and laughed so much together since the season began, should listen to "The True Story of the Beautiful Girl Who Can Not Marry." An ethical interest is added to the narrative by the insight which is afforded of the womanly instincts of the gentle matron who bared this family skeleton. She has a daughter of her own who does not shine when contrasted with the tall, fair, blonde girl. Several times had she observed me chatting with the Baltimore belle, and that may explain why she got me apart from the crowd in the great parlors to relate the woes of a most unfortunate family. At first the malice of the act was thinly veneered with a make-believe sympathy, but before she had finished, the hideous character of the curse that hung over the young creature was expatiated on to the minutest of its terrifying details. To render impossible any escape from a logical conclusion that death in a madhouse or more merciful suicide awaited this pretty woman, my chronicler went back three generations. I wish it were possible, without causing pain, to give the family a name. My informant, for the purpose of her recital, spared nobody. But I am not a woman, and can not understand the strength of her impulses to destroy a person who never knowingly crossed her path. If I were to whisper a few words to ambitious young girls they would be: "Fear most the mothers of your rivals." Well, here's the story, as nearly reproduced as memory permits:

"The barbaric strain descends through the female side of the house," began the matron, as she sent her daughter away on a young man's arm. "The reason for this is that the sons, with the single exception of her maternal grandfather, never lived to a marriageable age. In four generations, according to the statements of the family, there have been eleven suicides in the direct and collateral lines. The maternal grandfather of yon pretty girl was an Englishman who came to Baltimore soon after the close of the war of 1812-15. He was possessed of money and soon attained an enviable social position, but he was careless of both to a dangerous extent. A granduncle of mine, who lived in Philadelphia, knew the man well, and has often told me how he was constantly seeking to divert his mind by excitement. He was a bold and reckless player. Finally he married, and the couple lived together for eight or ten years. Three children, one boy and two girls, were born of the union. One day he disappeared, and nothing was heard of him for several weeks. At the end of that time a letter came to the sorrowing wife couched in the most agonizing language. Its purport was that the impulse of the writer to take his own life had grown so upon him that it then overmastered him. By the time the letter reached its destination he would be a dead man. And with a thoughtfulness that was worthy of a better purpose he declared that he would take his life in a friend's presence, so that proof of his death could be readily established. He further said that he was the only one of his family that survived, and that the property he owned in Baltimore and Philadelphia would descend to his family, as provided for in a will amply witnessed, then in the custody of a friend. Surely enough, the next post from New York—then a week on the road—brought the sad intelligence of the husband's death. The body was interred in the Trinity burying-ground, and the stone, with the date of death, is still standing." The gentle raconteuse admitted at this point that there had been people malicious enough to say that the man had abandoned his American wife, and that, having another spouse in England, he had invented the neat story to get away without scandal. But her [illegible] knew better. It was a true tale.

"The will? Oh, yes. It was found, and [illegible] the most curious part of the story. After providing amply for the maintenance of the homestead, the widow and the children there was a supplementary clause reading something like this, as my granduncle repeated it:

"'In view of the fact that there is a [illegible] taint of insanity in my blood, and that for three generations [illegible] has always been a [illegible] of my family, I, being of sound mind, do wish to provide for the last one who will [illegible] succeed me. I therefore direct that [illegible] to be realized from the sale of my property shall be safely invested by my executors for the support of an invalid and his or her successors.' Then again, in the form of a codicil, was this clause:

"'To the last one [illegible], and to [illegible] his or her successor the small house in the North woods known and designated as "Ashmere," and I suggest that he or she be there confined under watchful care, rather than in a public hospital.'

"The widow was terribly shocked at this revelation. Every thing that a woman's heart could suggest was done to keep the knowledge of the family taint from the children. It hung over the mother's life and blighted it. The boy grew to man's estate, but was a shy, secretive person, and was one day found drowned in the Patapsco. The coroner's verdict was mercifully framed to read 'accidentally drowned,' but nobody doubted that it was the reappearance of the suicidal impulse. What became of the elder girl my informant never heard. There was some mystery there, also, but the matron never fathomed it.

"The younger daughter, however, married. She had always been of a lively disposition, had shown no tendency toward moroseness, and the mother began to believe that the curse of madness would pass over her only remaining child. The suitor for the girl's hand had been told the family secret, and, though staggered for the time, he had solemnly accepted the responsibility. He was very proud of his pretty wife, and well he might be. They lived very happily together, the wife's mother finally dying, peacefully, assured of her child's escape. But it was not to be so. After five years of marriage the first child, a son, was born. The young wife's manner changed completely. Her gayety disappeared. In vain the husband tried to rally her. She recovered her physical health, but her eyes permanently took on that strange, sleepy look that her daughter now has. But, not to get ahead of the story, a trip to Europe, in the constant attendance of her devoted husband and maid, was followed by the advent of the daughter, whom we all know. The family had returned to Baltimore prior to this event. The mental disease fully developed in the mother soon after, and, having tried all the specialists in the country, the husband was sorrowfully induced to send his wife to the house 'in the North woods,' a tract of forest about twenty miles out on the Hagerstown road.

"The two children were committed to the care of a housekeeper. A servant maid, who had been in the family of the wife's mother, was also retained. That was a serious error, for one day the three were missed, and, after long and anxious search, they were found at 'Ashmere' sitting on the ground outside watching the antics and listening to the howls of the demented woman within. She could be plainly seen through the grated windows. This scene left an indelible impression on the minds of both children. They knew their mother. And, though they were taken back to town with the utmost dispatch, they remembered the road, and, in after years, they frequently made the journey surreptitiously. Hours were spent by them in this sad, speechless association with the mother they loved. She never recognized them. It was more pitiful than a visit to her grave. And to me now there comes a shudder as I think of this fair girl, whose presence at Long Branch this summer has been a delight even to those who know her not, standing with tears in her big, blue eyes in front of the grated door to her mad mother's cage. What human sorrow equal to hers! In her heart the cankerworm of woe. She can not marry—first, because she dares not, and, second, because the most venturesome man in this Republic recoils from the inevitable prospect of a maniac wife. Ah! the cold, merciless words of the gentle, Christian matron as she closes the recital:

"'Fine girl, and rich. Why, she's the sole heir to "the house in the North woods," and will one day be its tenant.'"—Long Branch Letter to N. Y. Herald.

A MOA'S SKELETON.

A Probably Extinct Bird Which Attained a Height of Fourteen Feet.

Among the New Zealand exhibits at the Colinderies in London is the skeleton of a moa. The moa was a bird much larger than the ostrich, attaining a height of fourteen feet, and but recently extinct. Indeed, it is held by some that living specimens may still exist in the interior of New Zealand, though there is not much ground for hope in this respect. It is supposed by naturalists that the bird lived largely on the roots of ferns so numerous in the islands of Australasia, its legs and claws being of wonderful strength and specially adapted for scratching. In the new red sandstone of the Connecticut river valley in Massachusetts imprints of the feet of large birds have been found which are of a character to indicate that the moa, or a bird very nearly like it, once existed on this continent. Here, however, it disappeared at an early stage. The skeleton in the Colinderies exhibition is ten feet high, which, with two smaller specimens, have been lent by the Canterbury (New Zealand) Museum. Exhibited with the birds is the only moa's egg in existence. It was discovered in the Kaikoura peninsula, and is about the size of two ostrich eggs.—Chicago Tribune.

A Deep Artesian Well.

A remarkable example of the increase of temperature in the earth towards the center has been presented at Pesth, where the deepest artesian well in the world is that now being bored for the purpose of supplying the public baths and other establishments with hot water. A depth of 951 meters—3,120 feet—has already been reached, and it furnishes 800 cubic meters—176,000 gallons—daily, at a temperature of 70 degrees C.—158 Fahr. The municipality have recently voted a large subvention, in order that the boring may be continued to a greater depth, not only to obtain a larger volume of water, but at a temperature of 80 degrees C.—176 degrees Fahr. It is suggested that it is thus within the bounds of probability that the time may come when a brewer will obtain his water supply from a well of sufficient depth to yield "liquor" at the mashing temperature.—N. Y. Post.

—Keep dairy salt and all other that is to be used for human food in clean packages and away from all foul odors, for salt will absorb impurities from bad air, and afterward impart it to food with which it comes in contact. Serious losses have occurred from ignorance of this fact.—N. Y. Examiner.

—Gather up all the machinery on the farm and see that it is cleaned, the iron parts oiled and the wood work well painted. Much of the machinery, like cultivators, corn plows, reapers and mowers will not be needed until next spring. The sooner they are under proper shelter the better. There is always more or less cleaning up on every farm that can be profitably done, and that will add very materially to the appearance as well as the value of the place.—Montreal Witness.

—If farmers will grow a field of fodder corn, they will find that it requires less labor in proportion to yield of produce than any other crop that can be grown. It may be sown very thickly in the rows, and should be harvested just when in the milky state, so as to arrest the nutritive matter in the stalk as it passes on its way to the ears. Such a crop is quickly grown, needs no hoeing, can be cultivated one way and can be carried as soon as cut directly to the barn for storage.—Troy Times.

—A writer in the Garden says one good use of stones in the garden is in layering, for we find that shoots and branches of all shrubs and trees root much more quickly if placed in the soil and covered with a large stone than if pegged down in the usual way. Even for many hardy plants we find this plan of stone layering very successful. A few good bowlders, half sunk in the turf, make a fine position for clumps of yucca flaccida, or of acanthus. If carefully grouped and fringed with any small-leaved, creeping forms of ivy, stones make very beautiful groups and add variety to flat surfaces.

MINCED MANURE.

Why Fertilizers Should Be Applied in a Pulverized Condition.

Fineness as a quality of manure has a considerable commercial value, especially for garden crops. Plant-food is available only when it is in a state of solution, possibly when it is so finely divided that it is on the point of solution. In the growing of garden crops this is an important point; for there we use manure almost, or quite, as much to hasten the crop as to increase it. Early vegetables bring the highest figures, and many sorts are of much better quality if grown rapidly. The quicker asparagus is grown the tenderer it is, and the way to grow it rapidly is to use fine manure liberally. The secret of profit in growing cucumbers is plenty of manure, both broadcast and in the hill, and that used in the hill should by all means be thoroughly fined. If well manured the crop is not only larger, but of much better quality, and the plant is better prepared to withstand the attacks of insects. The reader knows how much fine manure adds not only to the earliness but to the quality of lettuce. To have it juicy and crisp it must be grown rapidly, and therefore plenty of readily-available manure is required. I would not undertake to grow musk-melons without an abundance of fine manure, and if other than superphosphate or chicken manure, I would put a handful in the hill along with the seed. In the growing of musk-melons, manure plays its most important part in hurrying up the growth of the plants, to get them out of the way of the bugs; for as soon as they reach the rough leaf they are out of danger. For a market gardener to attempt to grow early peas without a liberal amount of fine manure is to court disaster. Fine manure on radishes makes them earlier, the yield larger, and the betterment of the quality of the vegetable alone would be a good return for the manure. Fine manure makes radishes sweeter and tenderer; rhubarb is benefited as much and in the same way. And so on through the list of vegetables. It is this quality of availability or solubility which makes liquid manure so quick in action. The addition of liquid to solid manure is a benefit oftentimes; not because there is any virtue in the liquid itself, but by reason of its action on the solid matter, which it divides and makes finer. Many know of the marvelous effects oftentime produced by decomposed poultry manure; and this is in great part due to the fineness of the manure.

But I advocate more. I say we should use minced manure. That is, manure not only fine, but mixed; a variety closely intermingled. I have but little use for special manures. I would rather apply a complete manure than a special one at any time. It may be correct to feed the plant, but I prefer to feed the soil, and let the soil feed the plant; and for this reason I use a complete manure when I can get enough of it for my purposes.—John M. Stahl, in American Garden.

APPLES FOR COWS.

A Beneficial Food Provided It Is Fed in Moderate Quantities.

Apples are not only not objectionable, but are beneficial to the health of the cow, and improve the flavor of her milk—with the qualification that they are properly fed. The apple is very poor in albuminoids, having in its fresh state only .21 to .27 of one per cent. The Baldwin has 14.50 per cent. of carbo-hydrates, including fat, and the Russet has 16.30. This gives the extremely low nutritive ratio of 1 to 80. This is poorer than the straw of any of our grains. The carbo-hydrates contain little or no starch, but pectose and pectin, and about 8 per cent. of sugar. Pectose contains a digester for other food, and this is what gives exceptional value to turnips and other roots.

There is no doubt that a moderate quantity of apples, say six to eight quarts to a cow per day, will assist in the digestion of her other food, and their flavoring will improve the taste of milk. But an excessive amount of apples might be an injury from the amount of seeds they contain. Apple seeds in considerable quantity operate on the urinary organs, and this is what has led some to suppose that apples dry cows up. The writer has often fed the small quantity of apples mentioned to cows with decided benefit. One need have no fears in feeding apples in this moderate way. It is better that they should be fed with nitrogenous food, as apples are very deficient in albuminoids. Physicians often recommend apples as an aid to human digestion.—Country Gentleman.

SENSITIVE ANIMALS.

Some of the Instructive Actions of Horses and Sheep.

A gentleman who recently made a trip on horseback through the mountain region of the West, evidently made an observation which was to him a discovery. In writing an account of his journey, he says: "The behavior of our saddle horses was very amusing, and showed their prairie life plainly. The moment they felt the cold storm they turned their backs around towards it and dropped their heads, and it took no little urging to induce them to proceed, as at each gust they would whirl their tails towards it as if turned by a crank."

The writer seems to have thought the conduct of his horses peculiar to those bred upon the prairies. It was, however, just what any horses would do under the circumstances, no matter from what part of the world they were brought. It should be known to all drivers of horses with what reluctance these animals face a storm or even a chilling wind. It may be quite reasonable to drive before the wind on a stormy day, when it would be positively cruel to go over the road in the opposite direction.

It is convenient to know this habit of the horse in case an animal has strayed away during a storm or a high wind. It will be found to have gone in the direction of the wind.

The habit of the sheep is just the contrary. This animal steadily faces the storm, holds its head well up, and is inclined to move forward. No domestic animals give their keepers so much trouble by wandering off in stormy and boisterous weather as do sheep; but the shepherds are saved much of the trouble they might have in finding their flocks by making search in a direction against the wind. This instinctive action of horses and sheep is common to all breeds, and is inherited from their undomesticated progenitors. Whatever may have been the origin of these habits, we can turn a knowledge of the facts to good account in giving our horses more rational care and treatment.—Youth's Companion.

Carrier Pigeons in Europe.

Carrier pigeons have long been an object of attention to the Governments of Germany and France. In this latter country the Minister of War lately directed a census of the carrier pigeons to be made, when it appeared that at Lille there were 8,000, at Roubaix, 15,000; at the little town of Wattrelos, in the Department of the Nord, there are 3,000, partly belonging to private individuals, partly to societies who endeavor to improve the quality of the birds. Attention is paid to the birds chiefly in the manufacturing districts of the East and North. In Germany the War Department has 6,000 pigeons. There are about one hundred associations that have about 15,000 birds. Independently of business messages there are frequent flying matches, and it has been ascertained that every year some thousands of pigeons are lost in those matches, or at least never arrive at their destinations or return to their homes.—London Times.

Then a miner went down, and sure enough the dog was there, and after being drawn up was found to be unhurt.—Atlanta Constitution.

FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER,

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

A Remarkable Escape.

John Kuhn, of Lafayette, Ind., had a very narrow escape from death. This is his own story: "One year ago I was in the last stages of consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could not live twenty-four hours. My friend then purchased a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, which benefited me. I continued until I am now in perfect health, having used no other medicine."

A BOON TO WOMEN

A Woman's Gratitude. Mrs. [illegible] writes: "When I had used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription one week, I could walk all over the [illegible] ... [illegible] ... with skill of the best physicians we could get ... and had almost given up in despair."

Terrible Pain. Mrs. F. B. [illegible], [illegible], N. Y., writes: "For five or six years I had been sadly troubled with female weakness and terrible pains across the small of my back and pit of the stomach. Three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription acted like a charm, and cured me completely, to my great joy."

Marvelous Benefits. Rev. [illegible], Michigan, writes: "I wish in this letter to express my gratitude for [illegible] the great good which has been accomplished in her case by the use of your [illegible] medicines. When she began to take them in January last she could not [illegible] ... When we consider that she had been Bed-fast for Months. bed-fast the greater part of the time for fourteen months, [illegible] ... we had almost lost confidence in medical practitioners and advertised remedies, but have found in your Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' the proper remedy, and which we believe will bring about a complete and final recovery."

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with backache or nervousness, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder. While the physician is ignorant of the cause of suffering, he encourages his practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patient is no better, but probably worse by the delay, treatment, and other complications made. A proper medicine directed to the cause would perhaps have entirely removed the disease, thereby instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

Doctors Fail. "Female Weakness" Cured. Mrs. Sarah A. [illegible], [illegible], Adair Co., Iowa, writes: R. V. Pierce, M. D., Dear Sir—"Having been ill a number of years, and having tried in vain almost every advertised remedy, as well as having paid nearly a hundred dollars to our local physicians, without benefit, I was finally induced to consult you. You advised me to send for your medicines. I accordingly sent for your 'Medical Adviser,' six bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' six of your 'Favorite Prescription,' and six vials of your 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets.' When I first began using these I could not stand on my feet. In ninety days I could walk a mile, and do light housework; whilst in six months I was completely cured, and my health has remained perfect ever since. I recommend you and your medicines wherever I go and loan your 'Adviser' to my friends. Two of our most prominent physicians who have read your great work 'The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser,' pronounce it the best family doctor book they have ever seen."

"Do Likewise." Mrs. E. F. [illegible], of New Castle, Lincoln Co., Maine, says: "Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment recommended in his 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' I commenced to improve at once. In three months I was perfectly cured, and have had no trouble since. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them, and inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and have earnestly advised them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks, stating that they had commenced the use of 'Favorite Prescription,' had sent the $1.50 required for the 'Medical Adviser,' and had applied the local treatment so fully and plainly laid down therein, and were much better already."

A Thousand Thanks. Mrs. Carolina Ayers, corner Duke and Argyle Streets, Halifax, N. S., writes: "Dr. R. V. Pierce, I thank God, and thank you a thousand times, for the relief that your valuable medicines, the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' have given me. I am perfectly cured of a chronic sickness that had troubled me for years. How my heart is overflowed with joy and gratitude towards you, my tongue can never express."

"All Run Down." Mrs. V. H. Peterson, of Lockport, N. Y., had suffered for three years from "female weakness," was greatly emaciated and "all run down" as she expressed it, and Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" and "Golden Medical Discovery" promptly cured her, as they have thousands of similar cases.

Doctor's Mistake. Mrs. Henry Patterson, of New York City, writes: "I had been under an eminent physician's care for eight months for what he called 'spinal disease.' I became worse during all this time, when, chancing to see a copy of Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser at the residence of a friend, I read that part devoted to 'Woman and her Diseases.' I soon became convinced that my disease was a uterine affection, which, as you say, caused sympathetic backache, inward fever, nervousness, and general debility. I commenced the use of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' applying also the local treatment which he recommends in the Adviser, and in three months I was well and strong."

OVER-WORKED WOMEN.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, dress-makers, general housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics.

Not a "Cure-All." Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system.

It promptly cures nausea and weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, eructations of gas, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. "Favorite Prescription" is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. For conditions, see wrapper around bottle. Price Reduced to $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

LIVER, BLOOD AND LUNG DISEASES.

Liver Disease. G. W. Lotz, Trudhomme, La., writes: "For four years I suffered from liver complaint and attacks of bilious fever; loss of appetite, nausea, constipation, sometimes diarrhea, pain in the back of the head, right side and under the shoulder-blades, fullness after eating, general debility, restless nights, tongue coated, etc. After taking four bottles of 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' I find I am as well as I ever was."

A Bad Case. Samantha Gaines, Lockport, N. Y., writes: "For six or eight years previous to 1880, I had been troubled with a severe pain in the small of my back, also across my shoulder-blades, with considerable bloating of the stomach from wind; was so nervous at times I could hardly sleep; also troubled with dizziness and hard breathing spells. I was induced by my step-daughter, Mrs. Warner, of Olean, N. Y., to try the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' The effects were marvelous. After taking three bottles I was entirely cured."

General Debility. S. L. Fisher, Sidney Plains, N. Y., writes: "Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. Dear Sir—My wife suffered for several years from general debility. She had become a confirmed invalid. The physicians who attended her failed to help her, and it seemed as if she must die. On reading one of your Memorandum Books, it occurred to me that your 'Golden Medical Discovery' might help her. I procured a bottle, and, after its use, a change for the better was noticeable, and after using five bottles, she was a well woman. I have recommended it to several, and in every case, it has produced good results. I can never feel too grateful to you for the saving of my wife's life."

Given Up to Die. Liver Disease.—Merrit Street, Esq., Druggist, of Bluff Springs, Ala., writes: "Miss Eliza Glenn, of this place, had been sick for more than a year with a severe affection of the liver, but when she was at the lowest, she bought three bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' from me, and, although before using the medicine she was given up to die by all the attending physicians, her father assures me that she has now fully recovered."

Malarial Fever. Mrs. Caroline Simmonds, Medina, N. Y., writes: "I have been troubled with symptoms of malaria, with fever, for three years, but after using three bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets,' I am happy to say that I am entirely cured, and to-day I am perfectly well and able to do my own work."

Dyspepsia Cured. Dyspepsia.—Lucy A. Wood, Taylor's Store, Va., writes: "After many years of great suffering from the evils of dyspepsia, I was induced to try your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I cannot express the gratitude I feel for the great good it has done me. I do not suffer any pain from eating, and I enjoy life as well as anybody can wish."

Diarrhea and Cough. Mrs. Curtis Bogue, West Enosburg, Vt., writes: "Two bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured my cough and chronic diarrhea. It has worked like a charm in my case. It is truly wonderful. I walked over a mile last week to recommend your medicines."

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

Abscess of Liver. Isaac Gibson, Kenwood, Pa., writes: "My wife is getting well fast. When she began to use your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' our best doctors in Indiana County said she would die. They said your medicine would do her no good; that she had an ulcer on her liver as large as half a loaf of bread. Well, sir, to our surprise, when she began using your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' she commenced spitting up phlegm for some two weeks, and then commenced spitting up corruption and blood (it looked like what comes out of a blood boil) for some ten days. She now has been well for weeks."

Boils and Carbuncles.—J. Adams, Esq., Toledo, Ohio, writes: "I have used nine bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the result is I am to-day free from boils and carbuncles for the first time in many years."

Constipation and Ulcers.—Mrs. A. D. Johnson, Georgetown, Ky., writes: "The 'Golden Medical Discovery' relieved me at once. I had a very bad sore on the back of my left hand for five months, and it cured that, as well as constipation and indigestion, from which I was suffering very much."

Scrofulous Sores. Mrs. A. L. Cory, Hadley, Crawford Co., Kansas, writes: "My son, aged fifteen years, was taken down last January with swellings on his right shoulder, left hip and knee. He lay helpless for five months, when great abscesses formed, four of which continued to discharge at the time he commenced using your 'Golden Medical Discovery' under your advice. Now, after having used four bottles of the 'Discovery,' he is almost well and walks three-fourths of a mile to school every day. A scrofulous sore on his arm, which ran constantly for two years, has healed completely under the influence of the remedy named."

"Fever-Sores."—Mrs. A. H. Crawford, Linn Grove, Buena Vista Co., Iowa, writes: "I am the person who wrote to you two years ago for advice respecting fever-sores on my leg. I took six bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and was cured."

Scrofulous Tumor and Sore Eyes.—Mrs. S. E. Graydon, of Greenwood, S. C., writes: "My daughter has been entirely cured of scrofulous sore eyes and a large tumor on her neck, by the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I have great faith in all your medicines."

CONSUMPTION, WEAK LUNGS, SPITTING OF BLOOD.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest Coughs it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

The nutritive properties of cod-liver oil are trifling when compared with those possessed by Golden Medical Discovery. It rapidly builds up the system, and increases the flesh and weight of those reduced below the usual standard of health by "wasting diseases."

Lung Disease. A Wonderful Cure.—Daniel Fletcher, Esq., Gloucester, Mass., writes: "Nearly five years ago, I was taken sick with a disease regarding which the three physicians who attended me were unable to agree. One of the foremost physicians in Boston called it a tumor of the stomach, and treated me for that, nearly killing me with physic; another, a homœopathic physician, thought I had consumption. When taken sick, I weighed 157 pounds. I suffered from a heavy cough, night-sweats, kidney troubles, etc., and was reduced so rapidly that my physicians gave me up. They were unable to help me in the least. At that time I weighed but ninety pounds, and had not been able to lie down, but had to sit up in order to breathe. I had been confined to my room for six months, expecting to die. I was so bad at times that I could not allow any one to come into my room, as I could not talk; nor was I able to walk.

Saved His Life. I picked up one of your memorandum books on the floor of the hotel where I was boarding, and after reading it I began taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the first bottle brought me around so that I could walk around the room all day. I soon began to build up, and gained so rapidly that it astonished me. I have taken no other medicine since then, and have used perhaps twenty bottles in all of this medicine. I stopped taking it in August, one year ago. I feel that it has saved my life. I now weigh about 160 pounds, and I think, and my friends with me, that this medicine saved my life. It certainly is worth its weight in gold, and I consider it a wonderful remedy from its effect in curing all my ailments."

Reduced to a Skeleton. Consumption Cured.—W. J. Hartley, Vera Cruz, Ala., writes: "I met with an old friend of mine not long since, and he told me of the very low state of health he had been in and he applied to our best doctor, but gradually grew worse under his treatment; was reduced to a skeleton, had a fearful cough and was thought to have consumption. While in this low state he made a visit to see his relations, and while in a distant town, he purchased a bottle of medicine called, 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery,' and took it, and by the time it was used he was as well as he ever had been. When I saw him, he looked to be in the bloom of health. His statement caused a great deal of inquiry, as he is a man of high standing."

Bleeding from Lungs. Joseph F. McFarland, Athens, La., writes: "My wife had frequent bleeding from the lungs before she commenced using your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' She has not had any since its use. For some six months she has been feeling so well that she has discontinued it."

Consumption Cured.—J. Anthony Swink, Dongola, Ills., writes: "For five years I suffered very much from a terrible cough and debility. More than a year since I commenced to take your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and it has completely cured me. I thank you for the splendid health I have since enjoyed."

Golden Medical Discovery is Sold by Druggists. Price $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

NEW SUGAR PROCESS

Which the Department of Agriculture Uses

Sugar Made Very Successfully in Kansas From the Sorghum Cane

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Last year the Department of Agriculture began to experiment in a small way at Ottawa, Kan., with the diffusion sugar making process as applied to sorghum cane. Instead of crushing the cane, as in the sugar cane process, it was shaved off in minute slices and the glucose, or sugar yielding sap, extracted by streams of water. The results obtained were so encouraging that the field of operations were removed to Fort Scott this year, and, with a largely increased plant, experiments are now in progress on a scale of some magnitude. To-day a telegram was received from Prof. Wiley, the chemist of the department, who is in charge of the works, announcing the complete success of the experiments. The telegram states that syrup has been obtained from the sorghum cane of light color, good flavor and crystallizing well. There was complete extraction of sucrose in six of the cells of the battery. Commissioner Colman is very much elated at the results of the experiments, and regards them as of great value from an economical point of view. In the process now used in the South there is a loss of nearly 50 per cent. of the saccharine matter contained in the cane, while the experiments at Fort Scott show an absolute extraction of all the sugar.

A GRANT RELIC.

House from Whence He Proclaimed Peace to Be Set Up at His Tomb.

RICHMOND, VA., Oct. 4.—To-day Captain E. H. Halleck, formerly Aide-de-camp to General Grant, concluded the purchase of the log house occupied by General Grant when he issued his general orders and proclamation of peace, declaring the terms of surrender of Lee's army. The house is somewhat dilapidated at the bottom, but otherwise is in good repair. It was the property of Dr. Richard Epps, a surgeon in the Confederate army. Captain Halleck will remove the house intact to New York, and present the same to the Grant Memorial Association and it will no doubt be placed at Riverside Park, near the tomb of General Grant.

German Cotton Mills.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Consul Monaghan, of Manheim, writes of the cotton manufactures of Baden that out of a population of one and a half millions 10,156 persons are engaged in the various employments necessary to marketing cotton cloth. Mr. Moneghan says in the manufacture of cottons the Germans are far behind Americans in men, methods and machinery. One is surprised to find old machinery rejected in America twenty years ago used here to-day; to see work done by hand slowly, that machines in America do infinitely better, quicker and cheaper; to see girls doing work that men should do.

A Mexican Hill Split in Twain.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 4.—A curious phenomenon has occurred at Chimapla, in the State of Mexico. Within a few days past tremendous subterranean reports were heard, though at the time the meteorological conditions were perfect, there being no unusual aspect of the sky, nor the slightest rain. The people of the town were filled with alarm and an investigation was made, by which it was discovered that a high hill in the vicinity had been completely divided into two parts by some powerful force.

The Daily Row in Belfast.

BELFAST, Oct. 4.—A number of youths who were creating a disturbance here to-day were charged upon by the police, whereupon they retaliated by throwing stones. A military picket which came to the assistance of the police was attacked by the mob. Major Doncaster, who was in command of the troops, was felled to the ground by a rioter. Three arrests were made.

Prohibition Burst at Atlanta.

ATLANTA, GA., Oct. 4.—The city council to-night passed a resolution permitting the brewery to deliver beer at private residences. The vote stood ten for beer and six against. This is the first decided weakening on the part of the city authorities in the enforcement of the prohibition law. The prohibition leaders are highly wrought up over this practical re-establishment of the liquor traffic.

Epidemic of Dengue Fever.

SUSPICIOUS.

The Ontario Government Employs Detectives to Watch the Movements of Supposed Disloyal Officials.

OTTAWA, Oct. 5.—For some time past the Dominion Government has been watching with considerable suspicion several members of the Civil Service who are in sympathy with the home rule party in Ireland and who it is feared were endeavoring to sow seeds of sedition among other Government officials. In view of this an order was issued yesterday compelling every member of the Civil Service to take an oath of allegiance to the Queen, failing in which their pay would be stopped. It is quite evident that the fears of the Government have been aroused as in connection with this movement, it has now been proved beyond doubt that the recent robbery of the minutes of meetings of St. Patrick's Society, which are now missing, were stolen from the room by a Government official, who recently joined the society for no other purpose than to secure those books, which the Government believes will disclose certain facts bearing upon the evidence of several prominent members of the Civil Service having spoken disloyally of the Queen and country, and having identified themselves with the Nationalist party. It has been an open secret for some time that there are several members of the Civil Service who are in sympathy with, if they do not belong to, the Fenian Brotherhood, and they are being sharply watched by outside detectives.

Several sustained broken limbs and others serious injuries, but no fatalities have yet resulted.

A Strong Probability That the Regency Will Secure Better Terms.

VIENNA, Oct. 1.—It is stated positively that General Kaulbars, in consequence of hints from St. Petersburg, has moderated his attitude equally with the Regency, and has become more conciliatory. An immediate relaxation of the tension between Russia and Bulgaria is therefore considered probable. General Kaulbars' moderation is due to a telegram from M. De Giers to the effect that Russia did not wish to interfere with the Bulgarian Constitution or with the domestic affairs of Bulgaria.

SOFIA, Oct. 1.—The people throughout the country have held meetings and adopted resolutions begging the Government to reject General Kaulbars' demands. Stambuloff has informed General Kaulbars that he himself and all the Ministers and Regents are willing to give a pledge that Alexander will not be re-elected. The inquiry into the revolution has been concluded. The Sobranje will be asked to empower a court martial to try the offenders. It is reported that three ex-ministers are implicated. Slight falls of volcanic dust resembling emery powder have been observed. Captain Curry, of the schooner Rodiak, reports that on August, 12, when 100 miles from the volcano, his vessel was enveloped in a black cloud. The darkness was so great that lamps were kept burning from 10 a. m. till 2 p. m. At the same time black dust fell upon the deck to the depth of several inches. Captain Abbey, of the United States Steamer Corwin, who arrived here August 21, also brought samples of the dust and reported having heard a noise like thunder while passing near the volcanic region. WIGGINS' PROPHECY

Causes a Whole Family to Become Insane.

[illegible], Sept. 30.—The family of Richard Wellington, a farmer living near the place, have gone daft over Wiggins' prediction. Wellington has of late devoted much of his time to studying Biblical prophecies regarding the coming of judgment day. His wife and two children were gradually impressed by his persistence that the end of the world was near, and were brought to that state where they were easily frightened. When Wiggins' last prediction was launched by the Wellingtons they firmly believed the earthquake would occur on schedule time, and would destroy the world. The fatal Wednesday arrived and the family prepared to leave the city in good style. Wellington constructed a platform upon which they all gathered, clad in their best clothes, and sat down to wait for the final shake. When yesterday finally passed without Wiggins' prediction being fulfilled the more courageous members of the community compelled the family to come down from the platform. The old man is trying to figure out by the Bible what caused the hitch.

BAD AS AN EARTHQUAKE.

The Havoc Played By an Unseen Influence Upon Pennsylvania Chinaware.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 30.—Gwynedd, a small town about twenty miles from this city, has been for a day or two past the scene of a remarkable mystery. The residence of a prominent citizen of the place has been visited by some unseen power which seems to delight in breaking up all his china and glassware, and performing other acts of a supernatural character which tend to render things uncomfortable for the family. By some mysterious influence dishes and jars fall to the floor or are hurled through windows or broken in the hands of those carrying them. The whole neighborhood is excited, and the town is visited by thousands of people to witness the manifestations. No satisfactory solution of the strange affair has yet been reached, but several scientific men who have visited the place attribute the phenomena to a species of magnetism. The people, however, will not rest satisfied until the strange visitation is thoroughly inquired into and the intruders routed.

Since his removal he has apparently forgotten base ball, and now worries over the belief that he has three wives—one in Kalamazoo, one in the South and one in Jackson.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

There has been more activity and firmness in the better and more useful grades of Burley and dark tobacco, and receipts of such grades are uniformly showing difference in favor of sellers, but the great bulk of the offerings, including common, medium and nondescript styles of leaf and lugs, are still dragging at as low figures as have been touched during the year. About [illegible] per cent. of the crop east of Louisville has been cut and north and west [illegible] to [illegible] per cent. in different directions. From all quarters come the highest encomiums of the crop as to its character and quality, and there is every indication of a crop whose merits will push it to a highly favorable position in the good graces of buyers and consumers. Some surprise has been caused here by the report that [illegible] round has already been offered for a large crop of stemming tobacco in Henderson County. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows for full weight packages:

A MOTION entered by Hon. Ira Julian in the Court of Appeals the other day has brought to light the history of a murder case, interesting alike to the bar and non-professional reader. As the result of a long-standing feud in the Turner and Middleton families, in Harlan County, James Turner, in December, 1872, killed Wm. Middleton, for which he was convicted in 1874 in the Clay Circuit Court, on a change of venue, and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. His attorney in the Circuit Court reserved his exceptions and prayed an appeal to the Court of Appeals, but when the case was called in the Court of Appeals there was no attorney to represent the accused. The court being guided by a rule of October 10, 1866, dismissed the appeal, and at the expiration of ninety days, the Clay Circuit Court ordered the prisoner taken to the penitentiary. That was about twelve years ago, and after the sufferings and hardships of a confinement of that period, the prisoner appears by counsel in court and claims that the rule of the Appellate Court, under which the appeal was dismissed, was in direct conflict with the Constitutions of the United States, and the State of Kentucky, which guarantee every person a fair trial and representation in court in person or by counsel. The rule cited reads: "Where the appellant shall fail to appear on the calling of the cause, either by himself or counsel, or by brief, the appellee shall on his appearance, either by himself or counsel or by brief, be entitled to a non-suit, and the court will, in such case, so order." The rule in all circuit courts is to appoint an attorney for a prisoner if one does not appear to represent him, and the counsel for Turner claims that the constitution in this respect applies equally as well to the Appelate Court as to the circuit courts. Of course the peculiar phase of the case places the Court of Appeals in a very embarrassing attitude. If the rule of the court be unconstitutional, then the court has unjustly deprived the accused of his rights, and possibly of his lawful liberty.

DEMOCRATIC STATESMEN

What Has Been Held by the Lights of the Democracy Regarding Civil-Service Reform.

The opposition of the New York Sun to Civil-Service reform leads it into forgetfulness of certain pledges made by the Democratic party in reference to principles. It designates President Cleveland's adherence to this reform as an attempted reversal of the Democratic system of politics and petulantly asks: "Where does he find the authority for undertaking it?" The answer to this is very simple. In the Democratic platform on which he was elected "flat," argues our luminous contemporary, "turning to the National Democratic platform, we find the sum of the Democratic declaration regarding the reform of the civil service to be for 'an honest Civil-Service reform.' If the Democracy had intended, upon assuming the control of the Government, as in 1884 they hoped to do, to make the civil service non-partisan, as Mr. Cleveland had proposed, and to establish a permanent tenure of office, the inevitable result of such a system, it can not be supposed that they would have failed to record their intention." The Democracy, in that platform, offered to the venerable statesman, whose memory is dear to his party, and also to the New York Sun, "the pledge of our devotion to the principles and cause now inseparable in the history of this Republic from the labors and the name of Samuel J. Tilden." Eight years before, that illustrious statesman was nominated and elected on a Democratic platform which said: "Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the Governmental business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot-box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor assigned for proved competency, and held for fidelity in the public employ: that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men, nor the instrument of their ambition."

This, the Sun will acknowledge, is explicit enough and sound Democratic doctrine. On this Mr. Tilden was elected, and on this the Democracy, in 1884, renewed to him the pledge of their devotion to the principles and the cause they fought for in 1876. On the 26th of June, 1882, Senator Pendleton, whom the Sun must acknowledge to be very excellent Democratic authority, closed one of his most brilliant speeches in favor of Civil-Service reform with the words: "To-day, the Democratic party is putting itself at the head of that return: Civil-Service reform is writ on its escutcheon and emblazoned on its banner. By its strength, and, in order to perfect it, the Democratic party will, sooner or later, come into power. When that time does come, when we take possession of this Government, when we shall put in the high places of power our worthiest and best, the President of the United States, the Chief of the State, under the people, the source and fountain of honor and power in the country, will be able to say to all as Van Arteveld said, in response to Vanclaire, who was thanking him for his promotion:

> "Supremacy of merit, the sole means
> And broad highway to power.
> * * * meritoriously administer'd,
> While all its instruments, from first to last, > * * * chosen for their aptness to those ends
> Which virtue meditates."

If this is not sufficient to convince the Sun that Civil-Service reform is a Democratic institution to which the party is pledged, perhaps our esteemed contemporary will hearken to the words of our grandest statesman. In Mr. Tilden's letter accepting the nomination, in 1876, written in this city, on the 31st of July of that year, he says: "The convention justly affirms that reform is necessary in the civil service, necessary to its unification, necessary to its economy and efficiency, necessary in order that the ordinary employment of public business may not be a prize fought for at the ballot box, a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ. Two evils infest the official service of the Federal Government. One is the prevalent and demoralizing notion that the public service exists not for the business and benefit of the whole people, but for the interest of the office-holders, who are, in truth, but the servants of the people. The other evil is the organization of the official class into a body of political mercenaries, governing the caucuses and dictating the nominations of their own party." Further on, Mr. Tilden recommends "the patient, careful organization of a better civil service system under the tests, wherever practicable, of proved competency and fidelity." Is it fair, then, for the Sun to characterize Mr. Cleveland's Civil-Service reform policy as belonging rather to the Republican platform than to the Democratic? The Sun's hatred of the President should not lead it to the extreme of falsifying the records of the Democratic party.—Albany Argus.

POST-OFFICE AFFAIRS.

A Department Which Republicans Said Could Not Be Managed Properly Except by Themselves.

The Republican newspapers at this time are watching closely the Democratic postmasters, and taking every opportunity, and making many of them, to find fault with the management by Democrats of the post-offices of the country. In many cities and towns it is very noticeable. When members of their own party were postmasters, these Republican newspapers had very little if any fault to find, and were generally ready with excuses for any actual faults of error or negligence, but now they watch closely and eagerly seize upon the least error and magnify it. This may be human, or rather Republican party nature, but at the same time it is neither fair nor just. While there may be more or less friction caused by the changes made in postmasters all over the country, the fact remains that the first eighteen months of this Democratic Administration shows a general advance all along the line in the efficiency of the mail service, while at the same time there has been a large saving in expenses. The official figures show these facts.

Another matter has had much to do with the efficiency of the service. This was the election of President Cleveland. Before his election many Republican postmasters regarded themselves as perfectly independent of the people and the patrons of their office. So long as they were all right with the Republican Senators or their own member of Congress, too many of them regarded that they had a mortgage on [illegible] they held [illegible] [illegible] ment of it. The moment the election of Cleveland was assured there was a decided change. Postmasters paid much stricter attention to the business of their offices and were much more accommodating and considerate in their treatment of the people. Their Democratic successors have performed their whole duty, and have taken pride in the promptness and efficiency of the service, and their assistants and clerks have for various reasons been spurred on to increased zeal and energy in their work.

While the changes in postmasters and their assistants and clerks have not been as general as is generally supposed, thousands of Republican postmasters, clerks, etc., yet remaining in the service, it is a matter of congratulation and honest pride that Democrats all over the country have shown themselves capable of taking hold of the mail service and running it without a jar or break and with increased efficiency. At the commencement of this Administration many foolish Republicans sneered and proclaimed that Democrats were not capable of managing the intricate affairs of the Post-office Department. That matter has now been fully tested. The mail service is better to-day than it was when the Democrats took hold of it.—Des Moines Leader.

ADDITIONAL FIGURES.

The Speaker of the Last House of Representatives on Democratic "Extravagance."

As in some sort a response to the accusation of extravagance on the part of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, which has found a place in most of the Republican platforms this year, Speaker Carlisle has made public, in the form of an interview, a summary of the expenditures of the Government during the past year; which is instructive through its conciseness. The fiscal year ending June 30 last is the first complete year of this Administration. In the usual course of things, it should have been a year of large expenditure, by reason of the addition of $7,302,000 to the pension list. A comparison with the year preceding, however, shows that, notwithstanding this increase, there was a net saving of $17,743,000; or, regarding the ordinary expenditures only, the reduction in the cost of running the Government amounted to more than $25,000,000. It is further notable that, while Mr. Cleveland is denounced in most of the Republican platforms for his vetoes of private pension bills which are clearly improper and often fraudulent, this great addition to the pension list was caused by the prompt adjudication, and allowance of claims under the new Administration. A larger number were thus disposed of than in any preceding year. This, moreover, was accomplished at the same time that a considerable saving was made in the cost of operating the bureau. Every department, in fact, showed economy in expenditure over the figures of the year preceding.

For the year that has now opened, July 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887, the ten appropriation bills which provide for the regular annual expenses of Government look to a still further reduction, the amount appropriated for the departments being $6,486,000 less than last year. It remains to be seen whether the result will confirm this expectation, or a large deficiency be found to be provided for; but the experience of the year just closed justifies the belief that the estimate will be found correct. The appropriations, indeed, would have been much greater if the Senate could have had its way; but the additions made by the Upper House to the amount of $13,000,000 were chiefly in the shape of river and harbor jobs and unwise pension bills, and had no relation to the legitimate expenses of the Government. Mr. Carlisle refers with reasonable pride to the fact that the House threw out $10,000,000 of these Senatorial extravagances.—Boston Post.

Will Work to Beat Blaine.

The overwhelming success achieved by Senator Edmunds in the election of a Legislature made up almost unanimously of that gentleman's friends, and, therefore, assuring his re-election to the Senate of the United States for another term of years, has already had the effect of crystallizing certain elements opposed to a renomination of Blaine in 1888. The fight against Edmunds by the Blaine managers in Vermont rallied all the opposing strength which could be mustered. After such an indorsement as Mr. Edmunds received he will take an open and advanced stand against the Maine candidate. Between Edmunds and Conkling there exist the closest political and personal relations. In the contest over the formation of the Electoral tribunal to count Hayes into the Presidential office, Edmunds exerted every effort to make Conkling a member of that body. Conkling had aroused the distrust of his party by his apathy after the doubtful result of the contest became established, and increased that feeling later by the announcement that one of the Oregon electors belonged to Tilden. The support of Mr. Conkling on that occasion by Mr. Edmunds came very near breaking up the Senatorial caucus. It was only through the influence of Senator Simon Cameron and a few others that an open rupture in the party was avoided and Frelinghuysen's selection as a member of the tribunal was accomplished.—Philadelphia Times.

——The builders of Republican platforms at the North have this year omitted two planks which in other times were regarded as an essential part of the structure. Indeed, to exhume an expression which has now passed into ancient history, we might call them the very "mud-sills" of the Republican political edifice. We refer to the "negro resolution," and the "view with alarm" plank, which have heretofore played such a prominent part in the compilation of principles when "our friends, the enemy," were wont to air their political faith. It would seem from these omissions that the Northern Republicans are no longer in such awful dread of the bold, bad Confederate brigadiers, to whom they ascribe the full purpose of doing many awful things to the Government and the country, when the Democrats gained the political ascendancy.—Raleigh (N. C.) News.

——The people are with Grover Cleveland because he is just, fearless and mindful of the obligations of his office, and because he has risen above the level of a mere politician.—Washington Post.

CLEAN NEWSPAPERS.

The Rapidly Growing Feeling Against Sensational and Unreliable Sheets.

There is a growing feeling in healthy communities against journals which make it their special object to minister to a perverted taste by seeking out and serving up in a seductive form disgusting and licentious revelations. There is good reason to believe that the clean newspaper is more highly prized to-day than it was four or five years ago. It is also safe to say that, as people in all ranks of life, who protect their own, at least, from contamination, become more conscious of the pernicious influence of a certain class of journals, which are called enterprising because they are ambitious to serve up dirty scandals, they will be careful to see that the journals they permit to be read in the family circle are the class that never forget the proprieties of life. Already men and women of refinement and healthy morals have had their attention called to the pernicious influence of bad literature, and have made commendable efforts to counteract the same, by causing sound literature to be published and sold at popular prices. These efforts are working a silent but sure revolution. The best authors are more generally read to-day than at any previous day. The sickly sentimental story paper and the wild ranger and pirate story books are slowly but surely yielding the field to worthier claimants. In praise of the decent newspaper it may be said that where it has a place in the family, and has been read for years by young as well as old, it has developed such healthy tone and such discriminating taste, that the literature of the slums has no admirers. Fortunately, the number of such families is increasing in the land, and as they increase, the journal that devotes itself to sickening revelations of immorality will be compelled to find its supporters solely among those classes who practice vice and crime, or are ambitious to learn to follow such ways. —Printers' Circular.

YOUTHFUL BURGLARS.

The Experience of Three Young Thieves in an Annapolis Professor's House

"When I was a cadet at Annapolis I had a novel adventure in connection with a party of [illegible] suspended for a year in the following manner. I was a member of the lowest class at the time [illegible] fifteen years old at the time. [illegible] of the [illegible] and we [illegible] we ought to find some Indians, or conduct a burglary at once if we ever expected to amount to anything. We held a consultation and discussed the matter. Indian fighting was what we most yearned for, but unfortunately there were no Indians handy, and a journey to the wild West in search of them was decided to be impracticable. Burglary was the only thing left us and to this we turned with avidity. The next question was what to steal. The burglars in the dime novels had always stolen money or silverware, but somehow, much as we reverenced and admired our heroes, none of us quite liked the idea of doing that. But happy thought! the examinations were coming. Why not burglarize the house of the professor of mathematics and steal an examination paper? We knew he had the papers all made out. The thing was at once decided on. We then began to provide ourselves with what we considered a complete burglar's kit. We made false keys that were so false that they would not lock or unlock any thing, made a rope ladder, and bought an alarm clock and dark lantern out in town. A night was fixed on for the daring deed, and at one o'clock our alarm clock woke us up to glory. Armed with our burglar's tools we sallied forth, and after eluding the sentries and watchmen arrived at the house of the professor of mathematics and effected an entrance through the coal-hole.

"The professor had an office back of the dining-room, and for an hour we searched this office with our dark lantern, looking in vain for the examination papers. Not daring to stay longer we decided to give it up for that night, but come again the following night. Our ignominious entrance through the coal-hole grated on our feelings. None of our new burglars had ever done such a thing, and so before leaving the house we drew back the fastenings of one of the parlor windows in order that we might enter in a more orthodox fashion the next time we came. Then we made our perilous way back to our rooms in the barracks. That day we learned that the professor had another office back of his bed-room on the second floor and we decided that there was where he kept his examination papers. When our alarm clock had again called us to yet the part of heroes at one o'clock, we stole to the professor's house and went in through the parlor window. Softly we crept up-stairs in our stocking feet. The door of the professor's bed-room was open and he was snoring frightfully. We found the little office back of the bed-room and once being in there locked the door from the inside and opening the window let down our rope-ladder so that we would have a means of escape if we should be discovered. We carefully searched everywhere, but found no examination papers. There was a little safe in the room, with a combination lock. The burglars we had read about had always been able to open a safe with a combination lock, but somehow we couldn't though we spent half an hour trying. Just as we were about to give it up and retire, we discovered a paper which had fallen down back of the safe. It proved to be the examination paper of the third class in conic sections. One of our 'gang' had a friend in the third class who was pretty sure to be found deficient in the examination and he wanted to take the paper and give it to him. The rest of us consented on the condition that it should go to no one else. We got safely back to barracks and in the morning the examination paper was given to the shaky cadet. Another third class man caught him studying it and the result was that all of the third class had the paper at their disposal if they wanted it. A few days later the examination of the third class in conic sections took place. It was a particularly hard examination and the professor of mathematics took his seat with a smile that morning, confident that it would weed out the poor scholars in the class. Judge of his amazement when every member of the class passed an absolutely perfect examination. Cadets who never before had been able clearly to demonstrate the simplest problems now tackled the most difficult and complicated propositions and elucidated them with an ease and clearness that ought to have pleased the professor. But it didn't. He smelt a rat of the largest size. There was an investigation and the whole thing came out. We three burglars were imprisoned for a while on the Santee and then suspended for a year. The admiral wanted to dismiss us from the service, but the Secretary, good old soul, would not consent to it."—N. Y. Tribune.

Plain Enough.

The following is given by an English writer as a specimen of Yorkshire dialect. The reader need not feel disheartened if it gives him some trouble to get at the meaning, though it was "plain eneuf" to the local magistrate.

Upon a certain occasion a couple of married ladies happened to have a social quarrel, which resulted in their being cited before the sitting magistrate of an old English town.

When the case came up for hearing the worthy magistrate could not make out which of the two ladies was in fault. However, the husband of one of them being in court, and being known to the bench, the magistrate said:

"John, yaw con tell us aw abeawt it."

"I," said John, "a con. Yo seyn, th' Top o' th' Loan's wife thrut a sup at ma wife, an' if oo'd it ur as ard as oo it ur, oo'd other killed ur or ur ur."

"I" said the magistrate; "that's plain eneuf."—Youth's Companion.

IT is one of the lamentable features of our American system of government and politics that a poor man has no business in politics, for the simple reason that it costs money—he can't afford it. Take our Congress, for example. The Government pays a Congressman $5000 per annum, liberal mileage, &c. The concurrent testimony of men who have been there is that they can't live on what they receive. If they lack other financial resources they come home poor men. So generally recognized is this fact that if a poor man aspires to a seat in Congress or the Governorship of a State he is looked upon either as a fool, who doesn't know what a risky step he is taking, or as an adventurer, who expects to make something besides his salary out of his office.—Fort Worth, (Tex.) Gazette.

SOUTH PACIFIC SAVAGES

The Wars, Dress, Rites and Social Habits of the South Sea Islanders.

The inhabitants of the South Pacific islands are in many respects strange beings. [illegible] singular fact in connection with [illegible] both in their manner and customs of life, both in their domestic affairs and when battling with other tribes. Some [illegible] miles from this city is the Marshall group of islands, the inhabitants of which are [illegible] for their warlike propensities, great size and gigantic strength, together with other traits of strongly [illegible] character and [illegible] of which little or nothing is known in the civilized world. A few days ago the three-masted schooner John Hancock returned from a trading cruise to the Gilbert and Marshall groups, and the master of the vessel, Captain William Chipman, secured a valuable collection of curiosities in the shape of war clubs, spears, boat paddles, shells, etc. With Captain Chipman, as a passenger, was a young man, S. F. Geary, of this city, who, during his visit to the islands, gained much interesting information concerning the islands and their inhabitants.

The natives are large and powerful. They are not unlike the New Zealanders, being of a dark, copper-colored complexion. In addition to a natural inclination for war, they are very treacherous and in some portions of the group are cannibals. Their main occupation is like that of the Indian, loafing and picking cocoanuts, which are prepared and shipped to this country with considerable profit. When not engaged in harvesting the cocoanut crop or loafing about on the ocean in a dug-out canoe, the Marshall Islander puts in his time carving grotesque figures on canoe paddles and in whittling out murderous-looking war clubs, spears, arrows and other similar weapons. In carving they display great ingenuity and while the figures as shown on the paddles are not exactly pretty, they are very intricate and are not unlike similar work done in China.

The figures on the paddle represent idols and, according to the Islander's belief, if upon his boat paddle there is carved the figure of an idol he can safely navigate anywhere. In this connection it may be well to state that these Islanders are the boldest and most skillful canoe navigators in the Pacific. They make voyages extending over many months, trusting to Providence, or rather rain, to supply them with fresh water. They navigate by means of a small chart composed of small sticks tied together and representing the position of the various islands as regards the point of departure.

In warfare their weapons consist of clubs, spears and arrows, all of which they use with the greatest skill and accuracy. The clubs are made of ironwood and are very heavy. They are of various shapes, the most murderous being the gnarled root of the ironwood tree. The other clubs are of lighter character. The arrows are made of light bamboo, the points being of ironwood. The spears are also made out of the same kind of timber and run down to a fine point, which is tipped with a poisonous preparation. The feather end is fantastic and gaudy, a regular bouquet of feathers plucked from the rarest birds being used and blended together with a strict regard for colors.

The Islanders, particularly in the vicinity of New Ireland, have no particular love for the whites, and it is not an infrequent occurrence to find some settler lying in front of his door dead. It is the work of some native, who, having become offended at the white man, has lain in wait and killed him.

The natives do not tolerate polygamy, and after marriage the women are famous for their idolatry. A sort of slave traffic exists throughout the islands, though, and single women can be purchased for servants for a mere trifle. Clothing is a thing unknown in most of the islands. In and about New Britain and Ireland, however, the breech-cloth is used.—San Francisco Examiner.

According to the vote taken on the question last Saturday, the citizens of Covington are overwhelmingly in favor of receiving their water from a reservoir above Newport.

The court-room would not hold the crowd that came to town Monday to hear Carlisle speak. Quite a number of ladies were present, but had to take standing room on the outside.

Mr. Abe Graves, of the Bullittsville neighborhood, made us a short call one day last week. Mr. G. has sold his farm in this county, and will start to-day with his family for Witchata, Kan. to make their future home. The RECORDER will be their weekly visitor.

The horsemen of Boone county are to be congratulated upon the purchase of American Chief, No. 3614, by their fellow citizen, Mr. C. W. Saxton, Burlington, Ky. A Waif.

Shortly after dark last Thursday evening Thos Allen, who lives in the Richwood neighborhood was going home, and when passing the residence of Mrs. Catharine Grubbs, he heard an infant crying on the stiles at the fence He went on to Jeff Carpenter's, where he told what he had heard. He and Carpenter returned and found the child at the above mentioned place where it had been left by some heartless, cruel person. They took charge of the little stranger, and last Saturday they delivered it to Judge Baker, who assigned it to the County Infirmary, where the little fellow is a prime favorite with the inmates. It is a boy and has the appearance of being about five or six months old. When found its clothing were skimp and it surely would have chilled to death had it been exposed to the chilly air any great length of time. A party of strangers, a man and two women were seen pass up the pike late in the afternoon in a carriage, and just before Allen arrived at Mrs. Grubbs', he met them returning, the man walking a short distance behind the carriage, and it is thought that the child was left by them.

Assessor Riley was asked: "How do the people like the new Revenue law?"

"Not pretty well, I thank you. I am listing property at its cash value which, of course, raises the figures away above those of last assessment. I have to do considerable explaining of the law. Many persons have thought nothing about the law, and when they ascertain what it is they remonstrate, but list as required."

SHORT INTERVIEWS.

Mr. Norris, how is Gratton getting along?"

"He is doing very well I think."

"Do you think he will get all right again?"

"Yes, I believe he will."

"Halloo, Bob Allen, what's the news at Walton?"

"The biggest thing that has struck our town lately was the revival in religion. Each church has held a meeting recently, and all told there have been 80 or more additions resulting from these meetings."

The RECORDER, meeting Hon. Reuben Conner, asked:

Mr. Conner, what do you think of the new Revenue law?"

"Well, sir, I say this: The present law was not the plan for increasing the revenue that I favored. I thought it would be better to increase the tax 10 cents on each $100 worth of taxable property, and let the old law as to assessments stand, but a majority of the members favored the present law; Something had to be done, because the Treasury is empty and the State in debt. The present law was not my plan but we had to take what we could get."

"Bob Wills, what ails you so [illegible]?"

"Why, I just know that Harry [illegible]"

"[illegible] W. [illegible] what is the [illegible]"

"Nothing very startling. I have been [illegible] it for several days and you can wager your bottom dollar that I am getting tired of it."

TWO HUMORISTS

How One of Them Procured a Meal at a Time When Rations Were Scarce.

During the war Fred Hamilton was [illegible] Fagan. Hamilton's [illegible] [illegible] Fred [illegible] miles from the camp. Hamilton accompanied him. He rode at regulation distance behind the general. As they neared the house Fagan stopped at a large heavy gate, of course expecting Hamilton to dismount and open it. Hamilton rode up and stopped. Fagan looked at him; he looked at Fagan. Fagan got down without saying a word, and opened the gate. Hamilton rode through and waited until the general caught up with him. Fagan hitched his own horse and, taking a seat on the gallery, began a conversation with the man whom he had come to see. Hamilton hitched his horse, took a seat near Fagan, leaned back, lighted a cob pipe and took an active part in the conversation. Fagan was a strict disciplinarian, but he had such a sense of humor that, excusing himself, he went behind the house and laughed until he grew red in the face.

In the same command there was another humorist, a practical joker named Henry McNette, who is now a pilot on the Arkansas River. Just at this time in the history of the Confederacy, rations became scarce. Parched corn and sweet potatoes do very well once in a long while, but are objectionable when taken as a steady diet. McNette noticed that Lieutenant Nowlin frequently visited a farm house, the elegant country seat of Judge Beach. He had often seen the handsome Miss Beach, and he knew that Nowlin was paying special attentions to her. One day McNette went to Judge Beach's house and rang the door bell. When a servant appeared, McNette put his hat under his arm and asked if he could see Miss Beach. The servant crabbedly replied that he would see. Presently Miss Beach appeared.

"Is this Miss Beach?" McNette asked, as he humbly bowed to the young lady.

"Yes."

"Lieutenant Nowlin, who is very ill, ordered me to come over and ask you to send him a broiled chicken and anything else that you think he might relish."

"Well, sit down there," said the young lady. She would not allow any of the servants to prepare the meal. She broiled the chicken herself and, nicely arranging the "spread," gave it to McNette, who again bowed humbly. He went down into the woods and feasted. "There was enough for three men," he said, in speaking of the affair, "but on that occasion I was three men myself."

The next day Nowlin called on Miss Beach.

"I am surprised to see you," she said.

"Why?" he asked.

"Because of your illness."

"I haven't been ill?"

"You haven't? How did you enjoy the chicken?"

"What chicken?"

"Why, one of your soldiers came here and said that you had sent for a broiled chicken. He was a—"

"Never mind. I know what sort of a man he is. I know him. He's that infernal Henry McNette."—Arkansaw Traveler.

BACKWOODS JUSTICE.

An Old Settler's Account of an Illinois Court Scene in 1832.

"Jim Baxter, take the witness stand and state whether or not you know the cow said to have been stolen by the defendant. If you do, state her age and value; in a word, tell all you know about her."

"Mr. Lawyer, ask one question and speak louder. I'm thick o' hearin'."

"Well, if you know the cow, state how old she is."

"I owned her thirteen years ago."

"Answer my question, how old is she?"

"Don't know; was so old I put hickory withes on her horns for the wrinkles to run out on."

"What is she worth?"

"She gives right smart of milk every day."

"I didn't ask how much milk she gave; state her value."

"Age ain't nothin'. I don't know the price of beef cattle."

"Is she worth fifteen dollars? Also state how much right smart is."

"She gives a pint in the mornin' and a half in the evenin'."

"Is she quiet? Does she ever kick the pail over?"

"I accept the amendment. She kicks and spills every day one-half the milk."

"Jim Baxter, you are an expert—a smart Alex.; is a pint and a half your estimate of right smart?"

"Yaas, that is the law in Indiana and in old Kaintuck, whar I was born."

The Court turns to the Clerk and states: "Mr. Clerk, whereas Indiana and Kaintuck, being older States, heretofore let it be recorded as a ruling that henceforth a pint and a half of whisky, rum and all life-invigorating beverages, including milk, shall be known and acknowledged as 'right smart' in this, the First Judicial District of the Commonwealth of Illinois. Call the next witness."

The bar rises in a body and informs his Honor that the hour appointed for the horse race has arrived.

"Thanks, gentlemen of the bar, Mr. Sheriff, adjourn court, sine die, till half-past eight o'clock to-morrow morning."—Detroit Free Press.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating voraciously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are most constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed form the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

THE WEIGHT OF A WORD

Have you ever thought of the weight of a word
That lies in the heart like the song of a bird
That gladdens the spring-time of memory and youth
And pervades with color the banner of Truth
That moistens the harvesting spot of the brain
Like dew drops that fall on the meadow of grain
Or that palsies the grain and destroys the fruit
And is like a worm at the lily's root?

I saw a farmer at break of day
Hoeing his corn in a careful way;
An enemy came with a [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Killed on the earth in the long [illegible]
The weeds sprung up and the [illegible]
Over the field, and the crop was lost.

A ship was launched on an angry bay
When the heavens frowned on the face of day;
The wind arose [illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]
And the waves beat up a [illegible]
But hark [illegible]
[illegible]

A poet passed with a song of thought
Held in his heart like a gem in a [illegible]
His lips were framed to pronounce the thought,
And the music of rythm his magic wrought;
[illegible]
[illegible]
But a jealous friend spoke near his side,
And on his lips the sweet song died.

A woman paused where a chandelier
Threw in the darkness its poisoned spear
Weary and footsore from journeying long
She had strayed unawares from the right to the wrong.
Angels were beckoning her back from the den,
Hell and its demons were beckoning her in.
The tone of an urchin, like one who forgives,
[illegible]

Drew her back, and in Heaven, that sweet
Words! Words! They are little, yet mighty and brave;
They rescue a nation, an empire save—
They close up the gaps in a fresh bleeding heart
That sickness and sorrow have severed apart.
They fall on the path, like a ray of the sun,
Where the shadows of death lay so heavy upon;
They lighten the earth over our blessed dead
A word that will comfort, oh! leave not unsaid.

A FORTUNATE ANGLER.

The Best "Catch" of a Young Man's Life.

They were summering in the Santa Cruz mountains, the most delightful place in the most delightful State in the Union. The days were long, but full of the interest that extended rambles and sylvan discoveries confer. A blue stream, in which one could wade or bathe to heart's content, kept up its ceaseless conversation, like the hum of near and far voices. How beautiful in the early morning was the light falling on the ranks of giant redwoods; and surely there never was a bluer, purer sky than that bent above it all!

Amy Desart, book in hand, sauntered down a leafy path, on which faint rays of light from the far sky sifted down through the redwoods' odorous branches, glinted on their scarred trunks, and fell like silver arrows into the rich shade of the forest. The book she carried was a pretext. The day was for dreaming, and what printed page could charm the eye, when there were a thousand distractions tempting the curiosity and challenging the admiration of a healthy nature? If a humbling bee, a vagrant bird, a clump of yellow violets or a broad "golden buck" were enough to speak to a poetic soul, or charm an artist's eye, who could tire of watching the grander beauties of a redwood forest, or weary of the sudden glimpses through opened boughs of the sublime blue mountains? So a book was quite a useless thing to Miss Amy Desart, but at the same time her habitual companion.

She was aroused from her lazy dreaming by a loud halloo. Indeed, she was not immediately aroused, for the hallooing had been going on for quite a respectable length of time before her drowsy consciousness stirred to the effect of something unusual; for hallooing, save for owls, was by no means common in those silent depths. Once aroused from her summery stupor, she listened with growing interests. The calls continued at intervals, pausing, seemingly in expectation or hope of some reply. Miss Desart concluded, as she heard no responsible halloo from any other part of the forest, that the call was from some one lost in the wilderness. As soon as her half somnolent brain had formed this conclusion, her voice took up the idea, and when another desperate and far away shout came to her ear, she answered with a musical call from her vigorous young lungs, at the same time going in the evident direction of the sound.

She was heard, for a responsive call came in slightly louder tones, so she knew that, whoever it was, he was approaching her voice. Making a trumpet of her hands, she cried: "Lost?"

The answer came quite distinctly, evidently trumpted in the same manner: "Yes."

She lost all her languor. Here was something of lively interest to occupy her time. "Who are you?" she called.

"John Westwood," came the answer. "Of San Francisco," he continued.

Unhesitatingly she plunged into the undergrowth and trackless way of the woods, her guide the voice, which kept up a rather one-sided conversation—if that can be called a conversation—as she only answered occasionally to show him that she was coming. She had no fear of being lost herself, for she had, time and again, roamed in the deepest and wildest parts of the forest, which was full of landmarks for her.

"Out - hunting - and - lost - my - way," came slowly and detachedly to her ears.

She stopped and said to herself: "I've a mind to leave him to his fate. The idea of desecrating this sacred place with a shot-gun!"

However, she proceeded to the rescue, determining to give Mr. John Westwood a caustic piece of her mind when once she had discovered him. (It is safe to say here, in parenthesis, that she forgot her cruel intention long before she came up to him.) She picked and crashed her way through the bushes for a mile, it seemed to her, but distances are deceptive when you have to work your way. At last, he, waiting, gave a halloo which sounded absurdly loud, when right on the heels of it the bushes parted, and a radiant wood-nymph, to be sure, in a becoming costume of buff lawn, the soft, loose draperies of which she had caught up to protect them from the brambles, revealing thereby the stiff embroidered ruffles of an immaculate skirt, and faultless feet shod in neat French walking boots. But her cheeks were flushed, her eyes were dazzling, and a cloud of shining hair rested lightly on her white forehead. Her wide hat, pushed far back on her head by some saucy branch, served as a frame to a bewitching face.

She beheld a tall young man in hunter's buckskin, leaning on a rifle. His brown eyes were a shade softer than usual, from their weariness, perhaps. His face was clearly cut, and a dark mustache adorned his firm lip.

For more than a moment they gazed into each other's eyes, then laughed and bowed. After thanking her enthusiastically, he said: "I had no idea of encountering a young lady to come to my rescue. I thought it was a boy who answered me, and fully expected to see a barefoot boy with cheeks of tan, instead of ——" he hesitated.

"You will see no barefoot boys around here," she said, hastily. "There is too great a fear of rattlesnakes."

"I have not seen any."

"May be not, for they are not fearfully prevalent, or I should not be here. But once in a while you come across an ugly fellow. I always go armed myself," she said saucily, producing a tiny silver-mounted flask from the depths of a capacious pocket. It was but a glimpse of the flask he caught, for she plunged it back impulsively, as if she resented the impulse of familiarity.

"If you will follow me, ——," she said, shortly.

"With all my heart. I love the woods but began to feel I should never get out of this. I have been wandering about seeking a path which I could follow anywhere for six mortal hours."

"It's easy enough when you know the way."

"Ah, but every one isn't a dryad."

"No. I'm especially engaged for the summer in that capacity," she said, stiffly acknowledging his meaning. "When I'm at home," she continued, thinking previous confidence called for a like return, "I'm Miss Amy Desart, of — well, every thing in general. We're nomads."

"I'm most happy, Miss Desart," he began in the stiff manner some people adopt when acknowledging an introduction, "to find in you an angel unawares," he concluded with regained ease. "And, and," he went on mischievously, "I think I was bitten by a rattlesnake some time this morning."

She turned in alarm and met his eyes, in which he could not repress a twinkle.

"Why, you said you hadn't seen any."

"I didn't see one, but I'm sure I must have heard a good many, and one could easily bite me and I not pay much attention to it, you know, in my perplexity."

She regarded him carefully, felt sure that he was a gentleman, and saw besides the mischief in his eyes a great exhaustion.

"I came off at four this morning, without any breakfast," and one could see his weariness was real. "You know," he added, excusing himself, "I expected to be back at the hotel by six with a deer for breakfast."

"You are staying at F——?" she asked. F—— was a village on the line of the railway, about a mile distant.

"I have been there for the last week, but intend to return to the city to-morrow. I suppose you can show me the way to F——?"

"Oh, yes. You must have been very faint. We are nearly to the path: and Miss Desart's compliments, and will Mr. John Westwood deign to partake of an informal lunch at Hepsidam?"

"Mr. John Westwood accepts with due informality, not to say that he jumps at the chance. But where and what in the name of the redwoods is Hepsidam?"

"Hepsidam—as the name signifies—is 'a place in the wilderness,' rented during the summer months to campers for a small stipend. We have been down every summer for three years. But here we are."

He stepped out on the path and stood beside her. How fragant and cool the woods were. The broad, leafy path made one sigh with pity for those who were bound to tread the stifling streets of the city. They soon reached the cottage, which was not far from where they struck the path. It was an idyllic repast that awaited them. Mrs. Desart was as lovely and cordial as her daughter, and Mr. Desart was full of bonhommie and unconcealed delight, at meeting any one so recently from the city.

"I wish I had had the good luck to lose myself in this vicinity a week ago," said Westwood, regretfully, as he was taking his departure, considerably later in the afternoon.

"Well, you can find your way here easily now, and we shall be glad to see you at any time," said paterfamilias, cordially.

"Thank you for your kindness, but my vacation ends to-morrow," he sighed.

They all joined him on his walk hotelward, to make sure of his taking the right turns and angles which were to take him to F——, and it seemed to him that Amy was even more beautiful in the tender twilight than before. They parted from him as warmly as from an old friend, with cordial handshakes all around, and Mr. Desart told him to run down any Sunday when he wanted a breath of the redwoods—an invitation cordially seconded by Mrs. Desart, and shyly by Amy. They stood and watched him till he reached a bend in the road, where he turned and waved his handkerchief, at which three handkerchiefs fluttered in response, then the bend in the road hid him from sight. They turned back on the path with rather a lonesome feeling, for this bright young fellow, whom they had not known a dozen hours before, had proved such a jolly comrade for the few hours of their acquaintance that they honestly regretted his departure. And though they would have disclaimed indignantly, and with truth, any suggestion that they had suffered ennui before his appearance, still they began to look forward to the possible Sunday when he would come again. They might have had visitors in abundance, of course. But, though not by any means selfish people, they were still not gregarious to any extent.

Their unsocial instincts were probably due to their fondness for traveling, and the ease with which they had always been able to gratify that fondness. Amy, in fact, could hardly have told which was her own country. She was as familiar with France and Germany as America, and Scotland she has always loved. But since they had discovered the redwoods of California, she was inspired by their grandeur to quite a strong patriotism, for, though cosmopolitan bred, she was California born.

The next Sunday John Westwood could hardly conquer his desire to visit his new friends. But he felt that it would be better taste to let one Sunday elapse between his visits. He was not very much expected, to be sure, as they did not look for him before two or three weeks. But in that week, Mr. Desart received a telegram that demanded his immediate presence in New York. And in a few days this family, always prepared for such emergencies, were on their eastward way. Mr. Desart, as politeness demanded, wrote a note of explanation and apology to Mr. Westwood, whose address he intended to transcribe from the San Francisco directory. His intentions were good, but when they had left New York and were far out on the Atlantic, he discovered the still unaddressed note in one of his many pockets.

It is unnecessary to dwell on the disappointment and surprise of Mr. Westwood, when in high spirits he set out on the woodland path, only to find a deserted house at the end of it. He repeated the visit at odd intervals during the rest of the summer and fall, but always with the same result, till he finally gave up in despair, and came near to believing that he had never been lost in the redwoods, but had fallen asleep on an enchanted hill-side (as Grimm's people do) and dreamed the whole thing.

It was late in September of the following year before John Westwood felt able to take his annual vacation from business cares. But the days grew so warm that he determined to break away from the hot pavements and ceaseless noise of the city, for a week in the mountains. But where? There were mountains north of him, mountains east of him, mountains south of him. He had only to choose. The mountains to the north were the Marin County branch of the Coast range, of which Tamalpais is the most prominent feature. But Tamalpais is visible from the city, so they wouldn't do. The same fault attached to the mountains to the east, that rise from the arid San Joaquin plains. Mount Diablo was their great failure, and his infernal majesty was plainly visible from the city. To the south were the Santa Cruz mountains, in whose depths his short idyl romance of a year ago was enacted. It is not strange that ignoring the charms of Mendocino redwoods which necessitated a day or two of steamboat travel, and steeling his heart against Donner lake and the snowy Sierras (which were rather far off into the bargain), he decided to seek the bracing mountain air in the Santa Cruz range. F—— was only a few hours distant from the city, and yet the place was a wild, untrodden wilderness—a wilderness possessing the great advantage of accessibility. One had only to strike out from the station at F—— in any direction to lose himself—as he had once proved—in a virgin and primeval forest.

He had no hope of meeting his quondam acquaintances again. If they had been down at all, he felt sure they had flown before that. He assured himself that he would not have wished to meet them, for they had treated him shabbily. It was a most contradictory impulse, then, that drew him the very first day of his arrival past the redwood cabin. If he had hoped for any sign of his will-o'-the-wisp friends, however, he was disappointed. No sign of life was about the place, and he avoided it in his future rambles. The large streams that flowed through the forest were famous for trout, and to trout-fishing he devoted himself, as offering fewer opportunities for getting lost than hunting the wary deer. So with rod and line, a plentiful supply of light literature, and a sportsman's lunch basket well filled, he would start out for the day. He was impartial in his choice of streams, and often angled in the one that flowed near Hepsidam. He chose that one to-day, and made his way up the stream for a long distance by leaping from stone to stone, or by walking the mighty length of the redwood trees that lay, as they had fallen, in and across the stream in every direction, and by wading with his water-defying boots in the beautiful smooth stretches of water.

At last he reached a place he judged favorable alike for angling and for reading. It was a redwood trunk, soft with mossy growths, hid among mighty bowlders; and from this shelter his line could play on a smooth pebbly pool that promised lots of trout. Here he ensconsed himself comfortably, baited his hook, flung his line out into the stream, propped the pole up near at hand (which may not be a scientific way to fish, but was quite in the way of a lazy young man), stretched himself at full length on his broad divan, chose the most conversational novel his pocket bore and was soon deep in its pages.

Behind him rose an absolutely perpendicular cliff, many feet in height, dotted from top to bottom with waving "five finger" ferns. They were of such dense and large growth that no portion of the rocky wall was visible, and down through the tops of the redwoods hundreds of feet above and over the living green curtain, the sun sent his flickering rays. The trout were wary and gave him plenty of time to get interested in his book, which, being a lively summer novel, caused him soon to forget the shyness of the denizens of the stream. So in turning a page it acted quite like a shock to his nervous system when he saw his pole bend and suddenly show symptoms of falling headlong into the stream. He caught it with the mental ejaculation: "It must be a big one to pull like that!" and straightway his book was forgotten. He lifted the pole and carefully began to draw in the line, at the same time advancing to the edge of his nook to see his game.

An exclamation of pain greeted his effort to tauten his line, and there on a rock in the brook he beheld his catch. He gazed in consternation at the sight of a girl seated on the rock, and bending over a rosy bare foot, which bore in the pink ball of a tiny toe a cruel black fish-hook. His effort to draw in the line must have caused her acute pain, and called forth the moan which smote on his ears. Her head was bent, and her hands were busy trying to draw out the ugly barb.

"This must be another 'Lorelei,'" he thought, "and these woods are surely haunted. I'll be carried off by a pixie next."

He hardly knew how to offer his services—as he was evidently unobserved, it was awkward to break the silence. But of course it was only fair that he should help this damsel in distress. He was just essaying "Allow me," when she suddenly rose, without having extracted the hook, and attempted the feat of walking on her heel. Then raising her eyes, she saw him helpless and guilty before her.

"You!" she cried, faintly, and let her skirts drop quickly over her feet, whereat the former became as wet as the latter.

"You!" he cried in rapture; for it was she! no strange pixie nor Lorelei, but his dryad of a year ago. "Can you ever forgive me?" he asked in deep contrition. "Let me take out that wretched hook."

She offered no resistance as he lifted her up on a mossy log, and then deftly, and as gently as possible, cut out the barb. Of course it was painful, but two or three little gasps were all the sign she gave, and they cut him to the heart. He tore up his handkerchief for a strip to wrap around the little bleeding toe.

"And now," he said, as gayly as he felt to be consistent with a bad conscience, "fishermen always carry their catch home, I believe, and you can not walk."

She yielded to this arrangement, saying: "It isn't far—I had just started out to wade up stream for ferns."

So Paul-and-Virginia-wise, carefully over the stones and up the road he bore his sweet burden, to the door of Hepsidam, where many explanations were the order of the day. Mr. Desart gave him the long deferred letter, and they all forgave him for capturing Amy so cruelly. But at his wedding, some months later, he confided to his friends at large that it was the finest catch he had ever made; and none who saw his lovely bride questioned the statement. And Amy declares no one can ever say that she "angled for a husband."—K. L. Carnarthen, in Overland Monthly.

Temporarily Postponed.

A Cincinnati youth, fourteen years of age, called upon a lawyer a few days ago and asked him what sort of an offense it would be if a boy kept six hundred dollars which a firm gave him to put in the bank.

"My son," replied the lawyer, "let me give you some advice gratis this time. Wait four or five years, and then cabbage at least ten thousand dollars and come to me for guidance."

The boy went off whistling and banked the money.—Wall Street News.

OUR FASHION LETTER.

Street Costumes—Autumn Tailor Dresses, English Coats and French Jackets—Charming and Inexpensive Gowns.

[Special New York Correspondence.]

Although there is an unusual degree of [illegible] in the magnificent dress fabrics for the forthcoming season, there is shown an unusual amount of conventionality in costumes designed for the street. Marked individuality and artistic fancy assert themselves in the heights of evening and "high tea" gowns, but as soon as a lady sets her dainty foot upon the pavement, fashion [illegible] her for her own and decrees what sort of garments wherewith she shall be clothed. [illegible] are ruled out and it is now a very unusual thing to see a woman shopping or taking a constitutional dressed in any other sort of gown save one in tailor style, and formed of some plain, [illegible] description. Arrayed in elaborate silk attire with billows of lace around her shoulders, and with fancy hat bedecked with flowers and feathers, she is at once set down as either ignorant of good form in the fine art of modern dressing, or as a lady on her way to a friend's some visit, who has lost her carriage in the crowd.

It is a matter of congratulation that the short trim, round skirt which clears the ground by several inches is still absolutely de rigueur for church, street and all ordinary occasions. The width of the skirt on autumn tailor dresses remains about the same, and kilts and panels and ample drapings are still the distinguishing feature. Tailor dresses for utility purposes are always severely plain with no fripperies whatever, the finish consisting of machine-stitching and rows of handsome buttons. But handsomer or rather dressier gowns show suits of cheviot serge, Scotch tweeds, Lachlavare, and like fine checked goods combined with silk, plush or velvet. If the cloth goods are of one plain, solid color, the vest, panels and tunic are often decorated with rich silk gimps, braiding or embroidery. The stylish English coats and graceful French jackets which accompany these garments are finished with an effectual trimming of these silk gimps in Arabesque and other designs, and in many instances the broad plaiting which reaches from belt to hem is covered a third of its depth with the same dense garniture, which has all the rich effect of costly applique work at a third its cost. The back draping is wholly untrimmed, but the ample vest, high military collar, wide pocket-flaps and turn-back cuffs are each covered with the silk gimp in a design particularly formed for each separate portion. The new jackets are short, close-fitting, and are either finished with a vest, or are double-breasted. Some of the English coats are cut with a single dart, others have two. The backs have the postilion plaits pressed to lie very flat, and there are but single side forms. The sleeves are in close coat style, and the pockets are often invisible, but just a slashed opening stitched at each end like those on a gentleman's coat. The boucle and frise wools for these jackets are extra fuzzy in appearance, and show bright and stylish mixtures of deep marine blue and cardinal, golden brown and ecru, chestnut and blue, and black and poppy red.

WALKING COSTUME.

PROMENADE COSTUME.

The coachman's coat of two-colored livery cloth is very chic and jaunty, and its velvet trimmings and large costly bronze and gold buttons render it very recherche in effect. Basques and polonaises divide popular favor almost evenly this fall, and each display a great variety in style and ornament. Nearly all fitted garments are very snug in their effect, and many handsome suits of heavy wool will be worn until severe cold weather, without any outer garment except the quaint little pelerines and shoulder capes of silk plush, velvet, Astrakhan, boucle goods, and fancy velour fabrics with raised velvet figures on gray satin grounds. These toy wraps usually match the material composing the vest, panels, etc., of the tailor suit. Ladylike and pretty suits of French cashmere are shown made up with velvet or plush, the costume including a wrap of the same. For instance, one tailor suit shows a dress of softest nuns gray cashmere, with vest and panels of golden brown plush and tiny pelerine of the same. The rich but simple effect of this dress was noticeable among an array which reached into the hundreds. There is an unusually large importation of these fine French goods, showing exquisite shades in all the standard colors, and a number of new beautiful pale tints for evening wear. Heliotrope, Persian, Mauve, Sapphire, blue tan and dove gray are the choice colors, and velvet or moire for vest collar and cuffs, will render the toilet more dressy and becoming. These charming gowns are a wise investment, for they are very inexpensive, as fine qualities can be purchased from fifty to seventy-five cents the yard, double-width, and ten yards will make a dress (using inferior goods for the foundation) that is paneled or box-plaited. An effective addition is a surplice front and sash of moire or velvet. Venetian red cashmere is very effective trimmed with black velvet ribbon, with suits of the skirt draped with black Spanish lace. Prettier and more delicate is a gown of mauve cashmere with milkmaid tunic turned up with a rever of violet velvet. A Fedora vest of mauve Surah and a short Russian jacket of velvet are added. Cashmere goods are also used as polonaises over the new handsome striped suitings which show clusters of pin stripes in various colors, the lines mostly brilliant on dark grounds, but in no degree conspicuous owing to the narrowness of the stripes.

A Most Liberal Offer.

A Chicago woman advertised for a lady's maid.

"How much do you pay a month?" asked one of the applicants for the position.

"Ten dollars."

"That's not enough."

"Yes, but whenever I get married I always give my maid two dollars. You should take that into consideration."

"I accept the position. Why, that will amount to more than the wages. That's the most liberal offer I've ever had."—Texas Siftings.

Threatened Retaliation.

"So, you won't take dot coat for seven dollar?"

"No, I guess not."

"Vhell, ... shall call it six, though I lose by it."

"No, I guess not."

"Say five und a half?"

"No; I'll look around a little."

"Vhat pecauses vhas you in, my friendt?"

"I sell grindstones."

"Oh, you do?"

"Why?"

"Oh, nothing, except dot vhen I like a grind-stone I look aroundt a leedle, too!"—Detroit Free Press.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

Cream Pie. Line a pan with paste and pour in the following mixture and bake: two cups of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of flour, one cup of cream. Stir well before putting into the paste. —Toledo Blade.

—To have a fine crop of cherries and no worms, simply spray them with London purple water right after the blossoms are dropped and then two or three times afterwards. Use a teaspoonful of the purple to a large pail of water. —Fruit Recorder.

—It is not always easy to start a fruit jar cover. Instead of wrenching your hands and bringing on blisters, simply invert the jar and place the top in hot water for a minute. Then try it and you will find it turns quite easily. —N. Y. Farmer.

—All small apples and others defective in form or damaged by worms have their best market on the farm as food for animals. If packed with sound fruit, even in small proportion, they reduce the price of all even to the point of loss. —N. Y. Telegram.

—Grapes, to do their best and not rot the least, require high, dry ground. Grapes growing where the vine is sheltered from excessive rains and hot sun are inclined to rot but little. We believe a trellis made with a wide board cover at the top would in a measure prevent rot and mildew. On high, gravelly soil we have had no trouble with either. —Cleveland Leader.

—Minced Veal. Cut the meat from the bones, and having minced it very fine with a small piece of lemon peel, grate over it a little nutmeg, and sprinkle on some pepper and salt. Put the bones into a sauce-pan with a large onion chopped fine and water enough to moisten well; thicken with a little flour and butter and serve on buttered toast. —The Household.

—Fig Pudding.—Three-quarters of a pound of grated bread, half a pound of best figs, six ounces of suet, six ounces of moist sugar, a teaspoonful of milk, and a little nutmeg grated. The figs and suet must be chopped very fine. Mix the bread and suet first, then the figs, sugar and nutmeg, one egg beaten well, and lastly the milk. Boil in a mold four hours. To be eaten with sweet sauce. —Boston Post.

—For Curing Hams: The following mixture has been used by our family (the countrified ones) for about three generations. The hams are sure to keep and are noted for their excellent flavor. For one hundred pounds of meat take four pounds of fine salt, four ounces of saltpeter and one pound of brown sugar. Rub the hams with the mixture every other day, until all is absorbed. No more salt is required. —Montreal Witness.

BEGINNING A DRAIN.

A Few Important Points to Be Observed in Order to Succeed Well.

1. Secure a good outlet for the water to flow off freely.

2. Lay the main drains from three to four feet deep—the latter depth is better than the less, but we can't always get the outlet to begin so deep. If the fall is sufficient, we can save it, and soon have the necessary depth.

3. We should use a size of tile large enough to remove the surplus water so as to have the surface ready for the plow in twenty-four hours after a rainfall. I have generally determined the sizes of tile about as follows: I look over the land and estimate about how many acres of the surface will run the water of a rainfall to the point where I am going to make my outlet. If the estimate is that the water of ten acres is to go through my outlet, I take half the number of acres as the size in inches for the inside diameter of my tile, which would be five-inch tile at the outlet, and smaller sizes in proportion as the line of tile advances, depending upon how the water is received. But if the fall is as much as an inch to the rod, and the work well done, then I would use a four-inch tile at the outlet, and a third of the way up the drain drop off to three's, and near the head of the drain use two's if I could get them. But we must make allowance for imperfect work, and it is well to have the tile large enough. There are more mistakes from the use of tile too small than of tile too large.

4. In laying out the line of the drain I make it as straight as I can to secure the most direct flow of the water. Then I stretch a line of two or three rods in length at the side of the intended ditch, and begin the work with a sixteen-inch ditching spade at the outlet end work back, going the spade's depth, throwing the dirt on one side. The width of the ditch at the top should not ordinarily be more than ten inches, growing narrower as we go down. I use an adjustable scoop to remove the loose dirt that fails to stick to the ditching spade. I work back the length of the line the first spade, then go forward and commence another spade of depth, and carry that back the length of the line, and then the last spade I work down deep enough to make the grade, leveling the bottom with my adjustable scoop.

5. The leveling of the bottom to receive the tile is the important part of the work. If there is water in the bottom of the ditch, I make the bottom so uniform in the fall that the water will flow regularly all the length completed. The ditch at the bottom should be just wide enough to receive the size of tile to be laid, then the tile will be supported by the side and not easily moved when the first dirt is thrown on.

In this way I work out the drain a line's length at the time until I have gone over sufficient space to make it necessary to lay the tile, unless there is quicksand, when I lay the tile as I go.

6. In laying the tile, commence at the outlet: lay the first joints of hard-burnt tile so they will not be injured by the frost. I lay a few cobble stones as large as my head around the mouth of the tile, to hold it firmly and protect it from the tramping of stock. As soon as I get two or three joints laid I stand on them and lay the next joint, placing the tile as closely end to end as I can, and as perfectly in line as possible, to have the water-way inside free from shoulders, also having the grade regular. When I have advanced five or six feet, I have a long-handled shovel (or the adjustable scoop will do) and fill in some clay on the tile, pressing it down firmly with my foot, watching carefully that the tile are not displaced. Having covered the tile in this way, I fill the balance of the ditch with a plow or scraper.

When the day's work is done and the ditch is not finished, I put in a board at the upper end to prevent the dirt washing into the drain during the night from any accumulation of water. In the way named I go on with the work until I lay as much as I can for the present, then I secure the upper ends and drive a stake, so if I should want to run the drain further I will know where to commence. And I generally do want to go further.—J. B. Moxom, in Drainage and Farm Journal.

MARRIED RICH.

How Whitelaw Reid Obtained Control of the New York "Tribune."

A number of New York journalists have married rich wives and have enjoyed, and still enjoy the freedom and ease which their vastly improved circumstances allow. They have not all been salaried, either. Not a few are among the most prosperous of their calling, so that it may be reasonably supposed that they were drawn to their partners by other than monetary considerations. The most conspicuous of these is Whitelaw Reid, whose wife is the only daughter of D. O. Mills, estimated to be worth anywhere between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000. The antecedents of the millionaire were humble. He began, it is said, by keeping a small tavern in one of the Westchester towns; went to California as an emigrant, and by energy, enterprise and good luck made a great fortune. His daughter, according to her intimates, is a very sensible, kind hearted, estimable young woman, and she and her husband are reputed to be devoted to one another. Her influence on him is described as having been excellent, which is fortunate, since he became a Benedict late in life, when one's ways and habits are ordinarily fixed. As the editor of the Tribune was thought to have property valued at $500,000 before marriage, he should not be suspected of mere fortune-hunting. But he had fifty-one shares of the newspaper stock mortgaged, as is generally believed, to Jay Gould, which he could not release. His wife received $1,000,000 from her father as her wedding portion, and she as the story goes, most generously gave her liege half of it to pay off that claim. He must have deeply appreciated the gift, for it placed him in an independent position, which he had not for years enjoyed. The bulk of the Tribune shares are now owned by the Reids and the Millses, so that the newspaper is strictly held by the two families.

Whitelaw Reid, in his days of poverty and struggle, was exceedingly industrious, one of the hardest workers in Washington, when he was correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette. And he was also very capable and won his way to distinction. Since he has grown very rich he takes things leisurely, although he still looks sharply after the Tribune's interests in the business and editorial departments. He considers himself publisher as well as editor, and he is credited with being an excellent financial manager. He is considered practical to his finger tips. Of Scotch extraction, he understands the worth of money as well as when he could earn only $15 or $20 a week. No man, it is said, relishes more what money will purchase or has a greater admiration for money kings. He is not very robust; he comes of fragile stock, and his present wealth enables him to save himself. When in town—he has lately spent his summers at Millbray, his father-in-law's fine estate, near Alemeda, Cal.—he gives about four hours a day to the office and six or seven to society, for which he has a weakness shared by few members of his profession. He derives much pleasure, I am told, from the fact that D. O. Mills is likely to be mentioned as Whitelaw Reid's father-in-law than he is to be mentioned as D. O. Mills' son-in-law. That is certainly a natural and proper pride.—Philadelphia Times.

Profit-Sharing in Kansas.

Some weeks ago the attention of persons interested in labor problems was called to the success which had attended the introduction of a system of profit-sharing by a firm at Topeka, Kansas. The firm had addressed a circular to each of its sixty employes in the summer of 1885. After referring to the unsatisfactory results of the business, each workman was asked to try and make his work count for as much as possible. The change for the better has been marked. There has been less waste of materials, gas and time, and largely because of these economies the balance-sheet on April 1 last was very gratifying. Another circular was then issued acknowledging the assistance of the men, notifying them of an increase of wages for those who were not limited to prescribed hours, and of the reduction of the day's labor to nine hours. The latest report is that the hands are more cheerful and enthusiastic than ever, and that the business is growing, although the wages paid are higher than at competing establishments.—Publisher's Weekly.

—A fruit-growers' society has been organized in Lynchburg, Va., co-ordinate branches of which are expected to extend into Nelson, Amherst, Campbell, Bedford and the whole tier of counties that bound the Eastern Blue Ridge slope.

FRENCH SCHOOLS.

Remarkable Growth of Education and Refinement Among the People of France.

The new, but on the whole, splendidly equipped schools are silently transforming France. There is far less flippancy, far less tendency to laugh at every thing in the character of French men and women in the present generation than in that of their elders. The rising generation will be quite as serious as the Germans themselves, and perhaps this is not entirely to be desired. The free school before the advent of the Republic was so poorly understood here that even now the middle class can not comprehend why it should be tolerated. With the selfish view of things which prevails in most of the European countries, they do not wish to be taxed for the education of their people's children. But the Republic does tax them roundly, and the City of Paris does a fine work making it possible for the poorest child, no matter how humble its parents may be in station, to have a comfortable meal in the middle of the day for the astonishingly low price of two sous. When this two-sous dejeuner was invented it proved very seductive to poor folks, and wherever parents were so poor that the two sous a day was a strain upon their resources, the city offered the breakfast to the child free, without making any disagreeable conditions. Thousands of children are daily supplied with a warm meal at the city's expense. The clerical party does its best to rival in charitable deeds its Republican antagonists, but it can not of course keep pace with the State, and great is its disgust thereat. —Paris Letter.

The ambergris brought home recently by a Provincetown (Mass.) whaler is said to be worth more—about ten thousand dollars—than all the oil she has aboard. It was found in a whale killed in Sanz Bay (West Indies) last April. —Providence Journal.

"Don't know what ails me lately. Can't eat well—can't sleep well. Can't work, and don't enjoy doing anything. Ain't really sick, and I really ain't well. Feel all kind o' played out, someway." That is what scores of men say every day. If they would take Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" they would soon have no occasion to say it. It purifies the blood, tones up the system and fortifies it against disease. It is a great anti-bilious remedy as well.

A BURGLAR alarm—"Wake up John! I'm afraid there's somebody getting into the house."

"I Feel So Well."

"I want to thank you for telling me of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes a lady to her friend. "For a long time I was unfit to attend to the work of my household. I kept about, but I felt thoroughly miserable. I had terrible backaches, and bearing-down sensations across me and was quite weak and discouraged. I sent and got some of the medicine after receiving your letter, and it has cured me. I hardly know myself. I feel so well."

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup

FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

ANARCHIST VENGEANCE.

Gottfried Waller, Who Testified Against the Chicago Seven,

Narrowly Escapes With His Life From an Enraged Crowd.

Chicago, Oct. 11.—During the late Anarchist troubles Gottfried Waller was quite a leader among the men, and when the trial came on appeared as a witness for the State, and gave evidence which did much toward causing the conviction of the prisoners. Many threats were made against him. Last night, accompanied by a friend, he entered a saloon at 166 North Wells street, a favorite gathering place of the Swiss element of the laborers. Some one said, "There is the traitor." Waller endeavored to leave the room, but the crowd followed him with cries of "Hang the dog," "Choke him," "Kill him," etc. Some one seized him by the throat, but Waller shook the man off, and drawing a revolver, shot several times into the crowd. For a moment they fell back, but soon came up again and attempted to hang him. Again Waller freed himself and fled into the mass of people. By this time he was nearly to Chicago avenue, and he ran for the police station. Captain Schaack placed Waller in the cell for safety, and sent a squad of men to disperse the crowd and capture the leaders, if possible. It could not be learned whether he had shot anybody or not.

HUNDREDS OF SKELETONS

Found in an Old Church Garret in Nice, France.

Paris, Oct. 11.—The old Dominican church at Nice, known as St. Dominic, is now used as a bakery for the French army. A few days ago, when the architect was employed to make some examination of the roof, he discovered in the garrets over six hundred skeletons that had been flung in without order or arrangement. The medical experts declare they must have been buried in the church three or four centuries ago. When Nice was occupied by the French soldiers in 1792 the monks were driven out of the church, which was used for military purposes, and it is supposed that in making certain changes in the floor the skeletons were thrown up in the garrets. The majority of the bones are those of women, and among these there is no doubt the skeleton of the Dutchess of Savoy, who was buried in the church. All the remains have since been buried in one of the cemeteries of Nice.

A MICHIGAN DUEL.

Two Neighbors Meet on Sunday and Fight to Settle a Lawsuit.

Pontiac, Mich., Oct. 11.—Frank Hollister was brought to Pontiac Sunday afternoon and placed in jail for fatally shooting Herman Van Staten, a neighbor. Both had some trouble recently over a cranberry marsh, and a lawsuit resulted. This was not satisfactory, and it is said they agreed to fight. Sunday morning they met two miles this side of Davisburg, Van Staten being accompanied by a brother-in-law, Henry D. Fisk, who also took a hand in the shooting match that followed. Hollister shot Van Staten through the body. Fisk was a poor marksman. Van Staten's revolver wouldn't go off. Officers are investigating.

Hauled Down Our Flag.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 11.—The American fishing schooner Marion Grimes, Captain Laudry, which is detained at Shelburn by Captain Quigley for breach of the customs laws in not reporting to the custom-house on entering the harbor last Thursday night, was lying at anchor in that harbor this afternoon with the American flag flying from her masthead. Captain Quigley, who was on board the Terror, which was anchored 100 yards below the schooner, ordered Captain Laudry to haul down the flag. The latter did so, but shortly afterward the flag was seen waving from the masthead. Captain Quigley again ordered the flag to be hauled down. This time the American refused to obey. An armed crew was at once dispatched from the Terror, who boarded the schooner, and Captain Quigley himself hauled down the American flag.

Attempt to Assassinate a Priest.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 11.—An attempt was made yesterday to assassinate Rev. Father Miekewitz, pastor of the Polish Church. Mass had been said, and the father had turned to address the congregation, when a bullet crashed through a window, and striking the wall on the opposite side, the missile passing within a few inches of his head. There was great confusion for a few minutes. A number of people hurried to the yard, but the assassin could not be found. There has been a good deal of trouble between different factions in this church in time past, the most recent being a long and bitter fight with a company of Hussars, which the pastor refused to recognize.

—Two ladies got in a horse-car and two young men sat near. One man gave his seat at once to the elderly lady; the other kept his place. His friend asked him, disguising it, however, in German, why he did not give his place to the young lady. He answered in the same language: "Because she is not pretty enough." But after a little reflection, he rose and surrendered his seat. The lady took it, and thanked him—in German!—N. Y. Independent.

—A Chicago newspaper tells of a young Hoosier who, to show his expertness on a typewriter, wrote a love-letter with it. It was a fatal mistake. The girl's brother was a printer and she could set type. She went to her brother's office and set up in cold type: "Dear Sir: I am not to be wooed by machinery. I inclose your ring. Please return my letters. Respectfully, ———." She worked that off on a proof-press and mailed it to the youth.

THE ANARCHIST PLOT

To Destroy Vienna Was Hatched in America, and Was the Most Diabolical Ever Invented

Vienna, Oct. 10.—The Vienna police have furnished the press with an account of the recently discovered Anarchist plot to burn Vienna. Although many details are obviously suppressed, the plot is shown to have surpassed in extent any diabolical ingenuity and dynamite plot hitherto concocted. Seventeen of the conspirators have been arrested. An examination of the prisoners shows that the plot was hatched in and directed from America and London, and was to be carried out by Viennese Anarchists who recently returned from America. The plot was cleverly organized. The conspirators were divided into several groups, one of which was detailed to set fire to the town, another to take charge of the dynamite operations, and another to forge the necessary official documents and to coin money for expenses. Parties were detailed to set fire in Funsing, Untermeidling, Hetzendorf, Meidling and Favoriten. The police got wind of the plot and watched it until it was almost mature. They receive universal praise for their zeal and circumspection. An Anarchist of Prague gave the first information concerning the conspiracy to the authorities. The plotters were mostly Czechs and Germans. They held secret meetings in a tavern at Funsing, where operators were instructed in the use and manufacture of bombs. The seizures include numerous daggers and bombs, dynamite fire bottles for firing buildings, printing and forging implements and a variety of disguises, all of the most ingenious character. Another plan to obtain money was by means of a forged document to frighten old ladies, at whose houses the plotters would make a domiciliary visit under pretense of searching for counterfeit money, when they would seize all the good money upon which they could lay hands. A recent fire in a private house was the result of an experiment with a fire bottle.

THE THREE AMERICAS.

The Proposed Permanent Exposition at Washington in 1892.

Washington, Oct. 10.—The proposed permanent Exposition of the "Three Americas," to open here in 1892, is rapidly taking shape, and the Board of Promotion in charge of the project are already encouraged beyond expectation by the gratifying responses from all over the country, and with the progress already made. The project contemplates: First, a Constitutional Centennial celebration at Washington in 1889 by the sixteen American republics in honor of the one-hundredth anniversary of the Constitution of the parent republic—the United States; second, a World's Exposition at Washington, in 1892, in honor of the four-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus; third, a permanent Exposition at Washington of the resources, arts and industries of the three Americas. The permanent part of this project does not mean a permanent fair of private exhibits. It means that the "American Museum" "American Art Gallery," the government exhibits by the fifteen Spanish American Republics, the State and Territorial exhibits of the forty-six States and Territories of the United States, and other features of the proposed World's Exposition of 1892, will remain permanently at the National Capital, in form somewhat similar to the present National Museum, and probably under the same management—that of the Smithsonian Institution.

Dr. Douglass' Bill.

New York, Oct. 10.—Colonel Fred Grant was seen by a reporter with reference to a paragraph published in a morning paper alleging that a sum of $5,000, left by will of General Grant to Dr. Douglass, had never been paid. Colonel Grant read the paragraph through and sat silent for a few moments with a troubled expression on his features. Then he said: "Dr. Douglass has already been paid, and paid in full, and I have his receipt. His bill was an enormous and most unjust one. My father left a written request to Mrs. Grant that Dr. Douglass be paid $5,000, that is to say, that the amount of his bill, whatever it was, should be made up to $5,000. The Doctor charged $7,000 and he has been paid it, every penny of it."

Deadly Diphtheria.

Wabash, Ind., Oct. 10.—Fears are entertained of the spread into this county of the diphtheria raging in Logansport and portions of Fulton County. At the former place the disease baffles the skill of physicians, and has now been raging fully three months, with deaths averaging 50 per cent. New cases at the rate of six per day are reported. This is partially accounted for by the filth of the city. Scarcely a day passes that a dead animal is not dumped into the river, in defiance of law.

Pleuro-Pneumonia Report.

Washington, Oct. 10.—The Commissioner of Agriculture writes that pleuro-pneumonia still prevails among cattle in and around New York City, in several localities in New Jersey, among a limited number of herds in Pennsylvania and Delaware, quite extensively in Baltimore City and county, in a few of the eastern border counties of Virginia, and quite extensively in some of the distillery and other stables in Chicago.

Boiled in a Vat.

New York, Oct. 10.—Wm. Dunn, employed in a chemical works, extinguished the lights this morning preparatory to going home, and in the darkness made a misstep and fell into a vat of scalding water. Although literally boiled, he was able to crawl out, and, in hopes of relief, dragged himself to a hydrant and turned the cold water on. This only added to his sufferings. His screams brought people to the spot, but they could do nothing to help him, for death soon followed.

A Michigan Jail Delivery.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Oct. 10.—At 6 o'clock this evening, while the officials of the Chippewa County jail were serving suppers to the prisoners, a break for liberty was made. The prisoners succeeded in locking up the jailer and escaped, in all probability over the border.

Opium Seizure at San Francisco.

San Francisco, Oct. 10.—Last night the Custom-house authorities seized a large quantity of opium which was consigned in the disguise of tea to Chung Yek & Co., of this city, and which came over on the Belgic last Thursday. The value of the opium seized is $20,000.

Stricken With Epilepsy and Drowned.

Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 10.—Mrs. George Henning, living with her husband on a farm in Eel River Township, fell into an open well yesterday, and when found was drowned. Express Robbery.

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 10.—Advices from Fordyce report a $10,000 express robbery at that place. The money is reported to have been taken from the Southern Express Company by H. B. Millar, a telegraph operator. The robber is described as having dark hair and mustache, left arm off between elbow and wrist, and also wears an artificial leg. He wore a blue plaid suit.

Giving Up Its Dead.

Cape Girardeau, Mo., Oct. 10.—The body of Judge Hager was caught yesterday afternoon about two miles below where the Mascotte exploded. This is the first one of the drowned persons that has been found, except the four brought down on the Eagle.

HADDOCK CONSPIRACY.

Leavitt Makes a Confession Regarding the Killing

John Arensdorf, Foreman of a Brewery, Accused of Firing the Shot that Killed the Prohibition Minister.

Sioux City, Ia., Oct. 8.—Important developments have been made in the Haddock assassination case. Leavitt, who was arrested in Chicago yesterday, was not brought here, but taken to Kingsley, the home of Attorney Wood. He is expected here Monday, the date fixed for the beginning of the examination of the parties arrested. Accompanying Wood to Chicago was F. A. Hill, business manager of the Sioux City Tribune, and Mr. J. V. Kelly. Mr. Hill was intimate with Leavitt, and it was through this intimacy that Leavitt was induced to surrender himself. Hill brought back with him the confession of Leavitt, which has been made public this evening. In his confession, sworn to before a notary public in Chicago, Leavitt charges that the shooting was done by John Arensdorf, foreman of the Franz Brewing Company. Two men had been hired to whip Haddock and another man, and they were told "not to punch him too hard but hit him in the face and give him a black eye. That will do, as we don't want to go any further than that." Leavitt said: "We saw Haddock coming across Water street from the Columbia House. No one said a word as John Arensdorf started toward him. He came up in front of Haddock and looked him in the face and threw up his hand in front of Haddock's face. Mr. Haddock pulled something from his pocket and struck Arensdorf. I then saw Arensdorf draw his gun and saw him shoot Haddock. I saw nothing more of Arensdorf." Arensdorf was arrested yesterday in Davenport, where he had gone as a delegate to *the Knights of Pyth*ias meeting, and is expected to arrive here during the night. Paul Leader and George Lange were arraigned to-day and admitted to the same bail as Munchrath and Sherman. Warrants are out for other parties implicated in the conspiracy, and it is said Leavitt has assurances that by turning State's evidence he will escape punishment.

Vienna's Destruction Plotted.

London, Oct. 9.—The Chronicle's correspondent at Paris says he has just heard from Vienna the details of a startling Anarchist plot to destroy Vienna and to assassinate Emperor Francis Joseph. The conspirators, whose plans were frustrated by the authorities, had intended to carry out the plot on October 4. Various timber stores were to be set on fire throughout the city, and during the confusion public buildings were to be blown up with dynamite. The police seized immense quantities of bombs and other explosives in different parts of the city, especially near the Imperial residence at Schonbrunn, and beneath the bridge leading to the palace, which the Emperor crosses daily. It was also intended to make an attempt upon the life of the Emperor at the same time. A large number of foreigners and Austrians were arrested. The ring-leaders escaped to Germany.

Increase in Land Entries.

Washington, Oct. 8.—In regard to the statement in the recent annual report of Governor Warren, of Wyoming, that immigration and the settlement of public lands in that Territory are being sensibly checked by the severe requirements exacted from settlers by the new rules and regulations of the General Land Office, Secretary Lamar said to-day that the records of the department show that for the fiscal year of 1886 the land entries in the Territory numbered 3,512, as against 2,923 in 1884, an increase of 589 in two years, the year 1885 showing a corresponding increase over 1884. The Secretary added that there had been a diminution in the desert land entries, which could be advantageously entered only in large tracts, requiring considerable capital; but in the number of entries made by individuals the records show a large increase.

The Oleomargarine Tax.

Washington, Oct. 8.—The Acting Secretary of the Treasury has asked the Attorney General for an opinion as to whether the oleomargarine law imposes a tax on the different ingredients used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and also a tax on the article when finished and placed on the market, or whether the law contemplates a tax only upon the unfinished article. The question has been raised by the opponents of the measure, and its determination will make a considerable difference one way or the other to persons dealing in oleomargarine.

Ghastly Warning to Criminals.

Steelville, Mo., Oct. 8.—The body of Pat Wallace, the murderer of the Logan family, hanged by a mob here on Monday night, was cut down and brought to town yesterday, and lay all day in the court-house stretched out on a plank, the noose still about his neck, and the hands and feet pinioned as the mob had left them. According to his request his parents were sent word to come and get his body. Word came back from his father that he would have nothing to do with the body of a son so unnatural as to murder his parents' best friends.

The Week's Failures.

New York, Oct. 8.—The business failures occurring throughout the country in the last seven days number for the United States 167, and for Canada 23, or a total of 190 failures, which is about up to the average of the last six or seven weeks. The failures in New York and the East are light, the bulk of the week's casualties being reported from the Southern and Western States and Canada.

Sudden Death of Senator Pike.

Boston, Oct. 8.—United States Senator Austin F. Pike died suddenly at Franklin Falls, N. H., to-day.

Resisting Eviction.

Dublin, Oct. 8.—While the eviction of a farmer named Tromoroe, living near Milltown-Malbay, was in progress to-day, the neighbors of Tromoroe gathered in force and made a desperate attack on the evicting party. An emergency man had his ear severed from his head by the blow of a stone thrown by one of the attacking party. Two arrests were made.

An Earthquake in California.

The amount of the deficiency is said to be $80,000. Carter is seventy years old, a carpet dealer, and was town treasurer for twenty years.

Diamond Robbery.

Chicago, Oct. 8.—Tom Donnelly, a diamond broker on Dearborn street, was robbed last night of a tray of diamonds, valued at about $500. A well-dressed man entered and asked to be shown some sparklers, and when the tray was laid on the counter the stranger threw a handful of red pepper in Donnelly's eyes and escaped with the diamonds.

A Whyo to Hang.

New York, Oct. 8.—Daniel Driscoll, the ex-leader of the Whyo gang, who was convicted of the murder of Beezy Garrity, in a Hester street brothel, on June 26 last, was to-day sentenced to be hanged on the 3d of next December.

A TERRIBLE SCENE.

Employees Escaping from the Roof of a Factory Building Which Was all Ablaze.

New York, Oct. 7.—A fire broke out this morning early in a four-story factory building on Hazard street. Eight different firms have shops in it. Samuel Paul's employes escaped by the east stairway. The employes of the other establishments could not so escape. The frightened employes made for the roof of the building. The last reached the flat roof with clothes afire and half smothered. Already the just deserted rooms were on fire and to stay on the roof was to perish, because the flames were breaking through the scuttle. Adjoining the factory was a two-story house with a peak roof. To leap to it was perilous but to remain was certain death. The employes shrieked in despair, and a large crowd gathered in the street below. With cries of terror that were echoed in loud wails from the street, men and women flung themselves off. Minnie Hoganskey fell in the street on her head and was mortally hurt, her skull being crushed in. A little boy who was clinging to the coping of the peak-roofed house was rescued by Paul J. Shappell, an old volunteer fireman, with the aid of some citizens and the police. The police went up on the roof of the tall tenement, No. 71, and threw a rope down to the factory employes still left on the roof of the burning building, and they were rescued one after the other. Others were taken into a window from the peak-roofed house. Hyman Roberts hurt his arm badly. All this took but a few minutes and then the police and firemen put up ladders. At this time the roof of the factory was on fire, but the firemen were soon masters of the situation. A close search of the burned rooms soon showed that nobody had been burned to death.

HADDOCK'S MURDER.

Arrest of a Theatrical Manager and Others, Charged With a Knowledge of the Crime.

Chicago, Oct. 7.—H. L. Leavitt, manager of the Standard Theater, of Sioux City, has been indicted by the coroner's jury of that city for conspiracy and complicity in the murder of Rev. George C. Haddock, in August last. O. W. Wood, an attorney of Sioux City, has been here for some time doing detective work, and in consequence of certain developments Leavitt gave himself up. He is fully acquainted with the assassination plot in all its details, and, while not knowing who actually did perform the deed, has knowledge of the party to whom it was assigned for execution. He declines to talk fully, pending his appearance in Court, but Wood says that while he is not the murderer, he will make important and startling disclosures.

Sioux City, Ia., Oct. 7.—The news of the arrest of H. L. Leavitt, in connection with the Haddock assassination, created a sensation here to-day. Leavitt is expected here to-morrow noon. The impression is that he will seek to shield himself by telling what he knows of the conspiracy. Fred Munchrath, jr., and Henry Sherman were also arrested here this afternoon as parties to the conspiracy, and placed under $5,000 bonds each. John Arensdorff, another of the party, was arrested in Davenport, Iowa, where he had gone to attend the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias. Quite a number of other warrants were issued this evening, but names of parties have not been made public.

The Halter Tightening.

Chicago, Oct. 7.—In the case of the Chicago Anarchists the motion for a new trial was overruled, and the prisoners will be sentenced to-morrow. In response to the question whether they had anything to say, several of the men addressed the court: "I shall die proudly, defiantly for the cause of justice," shouts Spies, in response to the judge. Oscar Neebe burst into violent abuse, calling State's Attorney Grinnell a cur, his assistants scoundrels. The police were assailed, and in short, his speech was a tirade of abuse. Neebe abandoned himself to a wild appeal for the judge to hang him with the others.

Salvationist Commits Brutal Murder.

Warsaw, N. Y., Oct. 7.—The town of Castile, Wyoming County, is excited over a murder committed there last night by Robert Van Brunt, an Englishman and a member of the Salvation Army. Van Brunt boarded with the family of Simon Roy, and last night found his son, Will Roy, sitting up late with his half sister Eva. Van Brunt told Eve to go to bed, and she refused. He then drew a revolver and fired at young Roy, causing a fatal wound in the head. The murderer was overpowered by a brother of Roy, and handed over to the town constable.

The Mormon Question.

Washington, Oct. 7.—The Utah Commission, through its chairman, has made its annual report to the Secretary of the Interior. The Commission is virtually convinced that only the military can eradicate the Mormon evil. There are 200,000 Mormons in the world, and polygamy is taught to the children in the schools and Sunday-schools as a Divine right. In Salt Lake City, during the past year, there were very few polygamous marriages, being restrained, it is believed, by fear of disfranchisement and the penitentiary.

Irish Troops Riot.

London Oct. 7.—The Royal Enniskillen fusileers, stationed at Aldershot, went on riot last night, in resistance to a draft that was being made for service in Africa. A savage fight ensued, and the Irishmen were only subdued after a number of soldiers and police were wounded. Forty-one of the rioters were arrested.

Mayor Smith's Case Will Drop.

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.—Common council this afternoon, by a vote of fifty to twenty-five, decided to postpone for the present a resolution to appoint a committee to impeach Mayor Smith before the select council. It is the general opinion that the charges will not be again taken up.

International Question With Mexico.

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 7.—Rafael Pinaie, a Mexican officer, who seven or eight years ago fired across the river at a deserter and killed him, the deserter being on the Texan side, while Pinaie was on the Mexican shore, was arrested here to-day. It is said that Pinaie will plead non-jurisdiction in the case, as he was in Mexico when the act was committed.

Now It's King Milan.

London, Oct. 7.—Rumors worthy of credence are current to the effect that a conspiracy has been discovered at Aitfrazna to kidnap King Milan and force him to abdicate, with the alternative of death.

Remarkable Escape of a Prisoner.

St. Louis, Oct. 7.—James Smith (colored), charged with arson, in Charleston, Mo., while being taken from this city to the scene of his crime by Sheriff Huff, yesterday, escaped from custody. The sheriff was standing by the prisoner's side in the aisle of the car, when the train gave a sudden lurch and threw him to the floor. Smith quickly opened the window and threw himself out. The train was stopped and a thorough search was made for him, but no trace of him could be found. The train was running at the rate of thirty miles per hour when he made his escape, but he was unhurt.

Oliver Ames Favors Prohibition.

Boston, Oct. 7.—In his letter of acceptance of the Republican nomination for Governor, Oliver Ames says, regarding the liquor plank of the State platform: "The repression of the liquor traffic, with a view to ending the social, political and moral evils that flow from it, has always seemed to me of vital importance."

Charge of Army Headquarters.

Washington, Oct. 7.—A general order has been prepared at the War Department changing the headquarters of the Department of Dakota from Fort Snelling, Minn., to St. Paul, Minn., on the 1st of November, and the headquarters of the Division of the Pacific to San Francisco on the same date.

SENATOR VOORHEES.

His Recent Great Speech at Indianapolis—A Masterly Presentation of the Issues of the Day.

The following is a brief telegraphic synopsis of Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees' recent speech at Indianapolis, in which he sounded the key-note of the campaign in the State:

Ex-Senator McDonald presided, and on the stage were a number of the prominent men of the party, not only of local, but State conspicuousness, and when the president of the meeting introduced Mr. Voorhees in the fewest words possible, the orator of the evening received a greeting which demonstrated how closely he has woven himself into the hearts of the people of Indiana. It is conceded that the speech is the ablest political effort of the Senator in any campaign. Contrary to his usual custom, it was prepared with care, as if the Senator had reason to believe that it would be accepted as a key-note by the opposition, who would carefully scan every sentence for the purpose of criticism. Taken as an entirety, it is a magnificent effort, and if there is a Republican so hopeful as to draw comfort therefrom he will pass among his fellows as a modern Mark Tapley.

Senator Voorhees was particularly happy in his review of civil service, as practiced by Republicans during their long lease of political power, and he emphasized his argument by copious quotations from Hoar, of Massachusetts, and from other standard Republicans like Sumner and Greeley, who were the first to raise their voices against the iniquity which had crept into their own party in their administration of the spoils of office. In 1871 there was an act authorizing a commission to promote the efficiency of the civil service, and it was approved by Grant, whom the Senator credited with an honest desire to do something in that direction, but it was starved to death by the party in its infancy, and General Cox, of Ohio, at that time a Cabinet officer, was made to feel the sting of the party lash when he lifted his protest against the plundering of the department employes in the name of the party.

During his argument in this connection the Senator began with the retirement of Belknap, then a Cabinet officer, who resigned to avoid investigation, and he continued the review through the iniquity which made Hayes President by the count in Louisiana and Florida, and the rewards in the way of offices that were parceled out to every one connected with that business, from John Sherman up or down, to show that with them it was a snare and a delusion, and that they invariably rewarded a party worker for his services to the party and not because of any special qualifications he had for the duty and for the office to which he was assigned.

The Senator also reviewed the Republican financial policy at considerable length, showing that both silver and greenbacks exist to-day as part of the currency by express command of the American people, irrespective to a great extent of party affiliations, and directly in spite of the persistent and determined hostility of Republican leaders and Republican Administrations. The plea of the opposition that the public lands be reserved for actual settlers was another matter which he exploded by reciting the enormous grants which the Republican Congresses had voted away to corporations in nine years, in this way disposing of 144,338,134 acres, while within two years of Democratic Administration it has been ordered that nearly 102,000,000 acres of land held by railroad corporations shall be thrown open to the people for homes and farms.

He also investigated the labor question, citing the various enactments within the past year for the relief of the laboring man, not the least of which are the bills putting the seal of condemnation on the use of convict labor by striking from the appropriations every item for the use of convict labor on public buildings, and also prohibiting the importation of labor under contract to compete with American workmen. It was this latter bill which the Republicans managed to defeat.

The tariff question was also given judicious attention, and his argument was based on the broad axiom that all taxation shall be limited to the requirements of an economical government, and that the necessary reduction in taxation must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to successfully compete with foreign labor. In his judgment a tariff which raises a sufficient amount of revenue, and no more, for honest government, and at the same time incidentally protects the laboring classes, the manufacturing interests and the agricultural and business pursuits of the country, will be of Democratic origin when it comes, and it will have the sanction of the most illustrious names in the history of the Republic.

The question of pensions was also treated at length, with the sentiment that any man or men guilty of unfairness, illiberality or bad faith toward the soldiers of the war for the Union would be speedily and utterly overwhelmed by the execrations of the whole American people.

The work of the recent Congressional session was then reviewed, showing what had been accomplished for the soldiers, and the effort of the Republicans to belittle the administration of the Pension Department came in for its full share of execration.

On the question of prohibition, taking for his text: "Where do the roads fork?" the Senator was particularly facetious in picturing the entanglements of the party whose leader in Maine was for prohibition, while in this State the party was so barren of speech that it could not say whether it was for sumptuary legislation or against it, for prohibition or per contra, or for high license, low license or any kind of license. The Senator was prompt to affirm that there was not a voter in Indiana who did not know the Republican platform on that subject was a mere juggle of words, a cheat and a fraud, and that it was so intended. To this, in striking contrast, he held up the unmistakable language of the Democratic platform.

Concerning the apportionment of the last Legislature, it was a sufficient answer to the howl of pain from Senator Harrison that in the infamous apportionment of 1867 and 1875 by Republican Legislatures, when the State was torn into shreds and patches, there was no protest from him and no scruple ever pricked his tender conscience. The present apportionment may be defective and uneven, and these faults will be remedied, but, whatever it is, it is truth, equity and fair dealing compared with the Republican work of past years.

The Senator concluded his speech by the following glowing tribute to the present Administration:

"And now, fellow Democrats of Indiana, [illegible] power of the State shall not fall into the hands of those who distrust the people and who [illegible] we are called on to exercise our rights and to discharge our duties as citizens. The administration of the Federal Government by Grover Cleveland has been bitterly assailed, misrepresented and slandered by the Republican State convention, and by the leaders of the Republican party in Indiana. No two minds, perhaps, ever agreed in every thing, and it will not follow that a supporter of an administration necessarily concurs in all its details, but I am here to-night to declare as far as my words will go, that the Administration of Grover Cleveland is strong, clean, faithful to public duty and worthy of all acceptation by the Democratic party and by the country. What public interest has suffered at his hands? What public duty has been neglected? What public trust has been betrayed? In the more than electric light thrown upon every act of his Administration and on every step of his public life by the powerful and sleepless newspaper press of the United States, he stands clear and above reproach in his great office. Senator Harrison had much to say in his recent speech in regard to Democratic pledges which he alleged had not been fulfilled. He well knows, and so does the country, that the Democratic party in Congress has no power to enact a law, nor to repeal a bad law heretofore enacted, nor to appropriate a dollar of the public money without the approval and the concurrence of a Republican majority in the Senate. The Democratic party has not had the law-making power *of this Gove*rnment, embracing as it does, the legislative and executive departments, a single day since the 4th of March, 1861. Every evil of legislation which has afflicted the country flows from Republican responsibility. If the soldier failed to get his arrears of pension it is because the laws made by the Republican party did not grant them. If he did not get his bounty, it is because a Republican President vetoed the bill granting it. If the colored people were cheated out of their small hard earnings and savings by the Freedmen's Bureau and in the Freedmen's Bank, it is because Republican laws were so made that the thieves could break through and steal. Senator Harrison seems entirely to forget the responsibility of his own party, as shown by the long and blotted records, while he vehemently arraigns the Democratic party for what it has done and for what it has failed to do in the last eighteen months, and during which time no enactment could be laid before the Democratic Executive for his signature without having first received the sanction of the Republican party in the Senate. My colleague appears to complain of the amount of the appropriations made in the last session of Congress, and quotes an imposing array and a specious arrangement of figures, recently made by Senator Allison, of Iowa. Is it not enough to say that Allison was, and still is, chairman of appropriations in the Senate; that he reported and voted for every appropriation bill, and that Senator Harrison voted with him? On the question, however, whether the actual expenses of the Government have increased or diminished under Cleveland's Administration, I am content to rest the whole case on the statement recently made by John G. Carlisle, the very able, clear headed and impartial-minded Speaker of the House. He puts the total expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, at $17,743,794 less than those of the preceding year. The Speaker goes into details, but none are needed in support of a conclusion reached by him. The recent Democratic State convention of Indiana, in a very comprehensive resolution, indorsed the ability, the integrity and the economy of the present Administration. Its ability is conceded by the people of all parties, and its integrity has not been questioned, and its economy has been proven by the record. Mr. Cleveland has broken no pledges. If broken pledges, however, are the theme for this canvass, I would inquire how the pledges, profuse, continuous and abundant, of the Republican party to the colored people of the country have been kept? Mr. Cleveland appointed, during the last session of Congress, a well-bred, intelligent, educated and very competent colored man to an important office in the District of Columbia. The Republican party has eight majority in the United States Senate, and that body rejected Mr. Matthews when his name came before it for Register of Wills. The love of the Republican party for the colored citizen is based on the same condition as its love for the former rebel of the South—party service; only that the rebel, when he belongs to the Republican party, gets offices in abundance, while the colored man, whether Republican or Democrat, is left to feed on the crumbs which fall from the Republican table, or more generally left without any thing at all. May we not expect the support of all classes who believe in an Administration which, under the most trying circumstances, has had the courage of its convictions, and has been faithful to all its pledges, either expressed or implied?

"The public debt is being paid more rapidly than the public creditors desire; the surplus in the treasury, so enormously overstated two years ago by the Republican candidate for Governor, is being rapidly reduced, notwithstanding the President withheld his signature to the Morrison resolution, emasculated and rendered worthless, as it was, by the action of the Senate. There is a feeling of confidence in business circles, and signs of returning activity and prosperity are abroad in the land.

"Let us join voices hands and hearts once more in the cause of good government. Let not Indiana falter now, and thereby open a breach through which the Republican party, with its evil methods, its pernicious principles, and its rapacious hordes may return to power in 1888. Indiana holds the key to future Democratic national success, and to the prolonged supremacy of a Democratic Federal Administration. If a voice which in storm and disaster, as well as in sunshine and victory, has always been heard in the battling ranks of the Democratic party, will still be listened to, I invoke a united harmonious and determined effort at this time in behalf of the present and the future welfare of the American people."

The speech attracted a number of representative Democrats from the State at large, all of whom reported to the chairman of the State Central Committee a flattering condition of affairs in their respective localities.

POLITICAL POINTS.

——Every note from Indiana is full of good cheer. Even the Congressional feuds have died away, and everywhere the party is in good shape and full of vigor.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

——It is announced that Mr. Blaine intends to stump the State of New York in the next campaign, whether he is nominated or not. This will be a magnanimous return for the action of New York in stumping Mr. Blaine in 1884.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

——Lieutenant-Governor Black was invited to the reunion of the Ninety-Sixth regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers at Pottsville. He replied: "I feel that the appearance of candidates on such occasions is not altogether delicate and might, indeed, be offensive to some."—Philadelphia Times.

——It is strange that the Republican press has never alluded to the fact that the bill increasing the pensions of widows and dependents of soldiers from eight to twelve dollars a month was passed by a Democratic House of Representatives and approved by a Democratic President. But the veterans and those who have been benefited by the act should not forget their friends in time of need.—Buffalo Times.

——The new Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, is reported as saying: "I have a letter in my possession in which Mr. Rounds makes a statement of the expenses of the office, showing plainly that he knew full well that the appropriation would not carry him at the rate he was going until the opening of Congress. If I had not begun the reduction at once, I should have found myself about the middle of November without funds to buy material or pay salaries. Mr. Rounds, knowing this, has placed himself on record as refusing to make any reduction, wishing to place all the odium of such a course upon his successor."

THE COMMONWEALTH

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has held with considerable steadiness this week the better action noticed as developing the last two weeks prevailing. This has applied especially to Burley tobacco, all grades of which have had a steady general demand, which without notable advancing prices, has kept them more closely to the outside limits of our quotations. While the manufacturing trade is sharing with other lines of business in the trade revival, the steadily decreasing stocks are admonishing manufacturers that they may not be able to afford awaiting supplies from the new crop. Dark and heavy styles have been steady, with no quotable changes in prices, though low grades appear to be attracting more attention in a quiet way. The first killing frost of the season occurred recently, and it appears, notwithstanding an ample weather warning, that in some localities 15 to 25 per cent. of the crop was caught in the hills. To what extent these contingents are injured is not known, but it sometimes happens that a very light touch of frost proves beneficial. The first frost this year was unusually late. The new crop is not yet moving. We quote 1885 tobacco as follows for full weight packages:

The Diamond Axle Grease Company, near the Southern Exposition, Louisville, burned the other evening. It was the property of the Chess Carley Company. Charles Bradeos, of the Number Sevens, stepped into a mass of melted rosin, and will be disabled for life. A fire engine struck a buggy in which rode Joseph Pierrman and wife. They were thrown to the curbing, and Mrs. Pierrman was perhaps fatally hurt.

The reunion of the Third Ohio Infantry on the battlefield near Perryville was a grand success on the 8th. About 300 survivors of this historic battle, which took place twenty-four years ago, were present. Representatives from Pennsylvania, Indiana and Kentucky regiments were numerous, although Ohio men outnumbered them. A fine dinner was spread by the hospitable people of Perryville, and in the afternoon appropriate addresses were delivered.

Charles Royse, on trial at Carlisle for killing Henry Tanner, colored, was found not guilty.

At Carlisle, John Dotin, freight conductor, was knocked from his train, near here, the other morning, by a bridge and killed.

A new post-office has been established at Licksburg, Magoffin County, with Ben F. Sayier as postmaster.

It is rumored that another victim of the Speersville tragedy has been found. The body of a white man was discovered near the Odd-fellows' Hall. His body had been concealed in a corn-shock, where it was found by field hands. He could not be identified.

The farmers living along the river road near Louisville, complain that they are suffering very much from the depredations of river thieves. Nearly every night a corn-crib or barn is broken open and its contents stolen. Their losses have been heavy.

John Bachman, who owns a dairy on Barret avenue, Louisville, was driving the cows into the yard the other day, where they were to be milked, when one rushed angrily toward him with its head lowered. Bachman started for the fence, which was about twenty-five feet distant. Just as he reached it the infuriated animal struck him, the horns penetrating his back. The animal then retreated a short distance and stood glaring at him. Mr. Bachman retained his presence of mind and climbing the fence staggered home. At the threshold he fell unconscious from the loss of blood. It is thought he will die.

Thomas Clark and George Howard were arrested in Newport charged with burglarizing the post-office at Sulphur of $55 worth of postage stamps and postal cards.

Mary Clauser, of Newport, found a railroad torpedo on the track and hit it with a stone. One thumb gone and probably her eyesight.

Frankfort is proud of her water-works, and relies on plugs to squelch her fires.

Duel at Vanceburg between Dr. W. H. Campbell and C. C. Caines, weapons 32-caliber revolvers. Caines wounded, but will recover. An old feud.

Sarah Laurel, an old fortune-teller who lives in the Wet Woods, near Louisville, is a snake-charmer. She had three large black snakes in her house as pets, and while fondling them on a table the other morning she engaged in a war with the entire outfit. One reptile wrapped itself around her neck, and, in attempting to cut it with a knife, wounded herself badly. The serpent was about to choke the old lady to death, when a laborer near her saw her struggling and went to her rescue. She became so excited in the fight that she lies prostrate, and may die. She is very old, and has lived alone for years.

The diamond fields in Kentucky, so confidently predicted by H. Carvill Lewis, the well-known American Geologist and Mineralogist, in a paper read before the British Science Association in London last month, have not yet been discovered, but the search for them has been going on quietly ever since the announcement of Prof. Lewis' conclusions. Prof. Lewis said that he had seen in Kentucky the same geologic conditions that surrounded the diamond beds at Kimberley in South Africa, where for the past seventeen years almost fabulous discoveries have been made and many millions of dollars' worth of diamonds have been found annually. Prof. Lewis is well-known to scientists and geologists in this country.

The following are the dates when the commissions of certain Presidential postmasters will expire: Ashland, February 19, 1887; Bardstown, January 29, 1887; Cynthiana, December 20, 1886; Elizabethtown, March 1, 1887; Glasgow, February 27, 1887; Mt. Sterling, March 1, 1887; Nicholasville, February 27, 1887; Richmond, February 27, 1887; Russellville, December 13, 1886.

Christian County, the heaviest tobacco growing county in the State, reports that the crop has been little injured by the frost and will be the largest and finest raised for years.

James Shofner was shot and killed by Sherman Bugg, at Henderson. The dead man provoked the quarrel.

Thos. W. Field, business manager of the District Telegraph Company at Louisville, is missing. Accounts all right and domestic relations happy.

At Eminence, John Campbell, colored was accidentally shot in his left arm by Wm. Williams, jr., while the latter was cleaning a revolver.

It is now charged that the assassination of Colonel Hawkins, of Mercer County, was due to the fact that he would have given important incriminating testimony in a murder trial. The suspected parties have been arrested.

Hon. J. G. Carlisle was renominated by the convention which met at Newport on the 5th inst. Below we give the platform adopted by the convention:

Resolved, That [illegible] maintain that [illegible] just government results [illegible] the [illegible] by each individual [illegible] the [illegible] of those natural powers which each would otherwise exert in the execution of his own will [illegible] to the power and will of others, and is compensated by a corresponding [illegible] of an equivalent on the part of each member of the community [illegible] the government [illegible] recognize the State and Federal constitutions, each in its sphere, as the embodiment of all just powers of government.

2, That the omission to observe these fundamental principles of government begets in the minds of the people equally a disregard of all authority, and tends to the disintegration of society and a total destruction of the common weal.

3, That we maintain that the several State governments of our Federal Union are charged with the duty of preserving the personal rights and liberties of all persons who may be found in their respective jurisdictions, and to see to it that a perfect equality of citizenship is maintained under the laws of the land.

4. That all those powers of government not expressly or necessary implication vested in the Federal Government should be exercised by the States in the promotion of the happiness and well-being of all people within their respective jurisdictions.

5, That the enactment and enforcement of all police, sumptuary, and laws which relate to the indoor and domestic concerns of the people belong exclusively to the States and have no place in the federal economy. It is the province of the Federal government to see that the people of the several States are unstrained in the exercise of all the reserved rights of governments, through their respective State offices and agents; but in no case has it the constitutional power to interfere with or control the internal affairs of any State.

6. That the Federal power should be exercised in all cases equally for the benefit of all the people of every class, condition and pursuit within its proper sphere.

7, That the public lands should be preserved for the actual use of settlers instead of being squandered in enriching corporations owned in great part by foreign capitalists under the guise of promoting the development of the resources of the country by the construction of railroads not demanded or needed by the best interests of the people at large.

8. That the public welfare demands that the people should be relieved from the burden of war taxation in time of peace. It is not for the good of the people that large sums of money, as now are, should be hoarded in the public Treasury, and Congress should therefore speedily adopt such measures as will arrest the flow of money, in the form of taxes, from the pockets of the people into the Federal Treasury.

9, That we find no warrant in the Federal Constitution for the exaction from the people of more than is reasonably necessary for an economical administration of the Government; all in excess of that need spoilation, not legal taxation.

10, That we maintain that there is no authority under the Federal Constitution for disbursing money from the Federal Treasury to the States, or to the people of the States for any purpose whatever, except in discharge of legal obligations of the Government incurred in the public defense.

11. That the interests of the people at large demand that such reform or reconstruction of the tariff laws should be adopted as will equalize the burden of taxation in that form and reduce the income from that source to the actual needs of the Government, economically administered. "Excessive taxation, even when successful in securing excessive revenue, is ultimately destructive of the sources from which it is drawn."

12, That in the enactment of tariff laws Congress should at all times have in view the raising of revenue rather than the fostering of any particular industry at the expense of others, taxing the luxuries rather than the necessaries of life. "The [illegible] and power of all the Government [illegible] for public purposes."

13. That [illegible] the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] the [illegible] of an [illegible]

14. [illegible] the people [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] equitable plan.

15. [illegible] that the best government for the people is that which governs least, and therefore demand at the hands of those elected to enact and administer our laws that in all things they act fairly and faithfully observe the constitutional limitations the people have set upon them.

14. That we approve the administration of the Federal Government by President Cleveland as wise, patriotic and Democratic, characterized, as it is, by a manifest purpose to conduct the affairs of the people honestly and faithfully in the promotion of their best interests; that in the matter of the substitution of our own friends for our adversaries in office we are content to submit to the better judgment of the President and his legal advisers as to the time when and the circumstances under which it should be done, believing that he and they will be actuated, as they should be, by considerations affecting the public interests and the due administration of the constitution and laws.

16. That we indorse in the fullest manner the course of our Representative, Hon. John G. Carlisle, whom we have so often honored and trusted, and who has reflected back that honor in prismatic colors by the distinguished manner in which he has discharged every trust reposed in him; and we commend him to the whole country as one honest, faithful and capable, and fit to be trusted in any public capacity.

A Commonwealth correspondent has this to say about a subject in which Boone county people are particularly interested:

"Some reasons why the citizens of Kenton and Boone counties should be charged twice as much for travel over the Lexington pike as over the Independence pike, and why strangers who hires a vehicle should be charged four times as much.

Some years since when the people complained of such enormous rates of toll, as are now charged, the reason then given by some of the directors was that the upper part of the road did not pay, and it took the revenue from this end of the road to keep up the other end. Soon the Trustees of the Southern Railroad came along and wanted to buy the upper part of the road that did not pay, and all at once it was found to be very valuable, so much so that it was sold to the Trustees for the round sum of $100,000, and some of the largest private stockholders received more money as their share out of that sale than they paid for all the stock held by them; and yet they are not happy, and must charge a stranger 6 cents per mile for a two-horse carriage, or a poor man who has to bury a member of his family, 45 cents for a hack to the cemetery, less than (3) miles from the corporation limits.

Can any one tell why the Legislature of our State puts the interests of the people in the hands of such directors, who do not even attend to keeping the pike in proper repair? It is a fact that not one load of rock or dirt has been put on the first five miles of the pike since last spring, consequently it is in a worse condition than ever known at this season of the year, and unless something is done before winter comes it will be impassable—and I suppose the dear people will have to go to the Legislature for relief.

The question is, what becomes of the tremendous revenues derived from the immense travel on that pike? Not long since it was thought the revenue might be increased by moving the toll-gate to within ½ of a mile of the city limits, and a suit is now pending in the Court of Appeals to compel them to put it a mile from the corporation line, the expense of which the people pay, as a matter of course, owing to the generosity of State officials."

AN exchange puts it about right in the following: "If a newspaper man desires to know how generally his effusions are read, let him publish something that is regarded as objectionable by the persons who never take a paper or pay him a cent. He will wonder how they know these things were in the paper, but wonder in vain. There is evidently a vast amount of "sponging" done. It might be added that he might say nice things of a man and his family for ten years, and he will never think it worth while to say "thank you", but make uncomplimentary notice of his wife's second cousin, and he will come in with a club to have the slander corrected."

THE corn reports from Chicago, embracing the States of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois, indicate that the grain is firm and sound and promises to grade well. The general average for eighteen counties in Illinois is about twenty-six bushels to the acre, while in fifteen Iowa counties the average is twenty-eight bushels. The potato yield is large in all the States mentioned.

—The problem to be solved in journalism is to make a good a paper as can be made and to sell it at a price within the reach of all. The people want all the available news, not mere condensations and head lines. MINING IN CALIFORNIA.

A Probable Increase in the Future Aggregate Yield of Gold

A [illegible] in Shasta County has put me in possession of some important facts regarding the production of gold, which I think will prove interesting to the public.

For many years the mining of gold on the Pacific slope was to a large extent carried on by what is known as the hydraulic method. The process was so far perfected that manipulating of a cubic yard of earth, though not yielding more than two cents' worth of gold, was nevertheless sufficiently remunerative to warrant the working. In order to extract the precious metal the hydraulic companies, most if not all of which were organized by foreigners and with large foreign capital, forced powerful streams of water through pipes, tearing down hillsides and washing away the soil itself with astonishing rapidity.

The devastation which this system has accomplished can only be comprehended by an eye witness. You have but to travel hither by way of the Central Pacific railroad, and you will be horrified by the baleful results of hydraulic mining along the western slope of the Sierras, at the Dutch Flats and at many other points. The earth which was dislodged by the hydraulic machinery was carried down the water courses, filling up the river bottoms, covering miles of rich farming land with the washings, tailings and debris. Desolation and ruin was threatened to prosperous towns like Marysville and Sacramento. There was even danger that the harbor of San Francisco would be filled up and obstructed, and that the expenditure from the National Treasury to protect and keep open this harbor would far exceed all the value of metal produced by those corporations. Meanwhile they left behind them, instead of the fair face of nature, and lands fit for cultivation, or at least pasturage, only a scene of desolation—the unchecked greed and selfishness of man destroying the very earth itself.

An action was at length instituted in the United States Circuit Court by the city of Marysville and by land owners in the vicinity against one of the largest of these corporations. A perpetual injunction was finally procured restraining the company from further operations. This should have been done many years before. The mischief was apparent, and, indeed, had grown to gigantic proportions. The tearing away and destruction not of rock but of soil, in order to get two cents' worth of gold per cubic foot out of it, is a palpable crime against the human race. The discontinuance of hydraulic mining inevitably wrought a large falling off in the amount of gold produced on the Pacific slope. Ruinous as that method was in many respects, it had proved very successful, and the yield of gold was accordingly very great.

Fortunately, however, American ingenuity has been found equal to this emergency. Stimulated by the large premium of gold, quartz mining has received a new impetus which bids fair to repair all, and more than all, that has been lost by the suspension of the hydraulic process. The mountains of Trinity County, Shasta County and other districts of the State have been diligently prospected for gold quartz formations. Many quartz mills are now in operation and many more are erecting.

A gold mill is a very simple and inexpensive structure in comparison with a silver mill. The heavy and costly appendages of the latter, such as pans and settlers, are generally omitted in gold mills. Indeed, if the gold in the quartz is free the necessary provision consists merely of stamps and copper plates, over which the crushed rock is made to run. In mills of the better class it may be remarked that some device is also commonly employed to concentrate the tailings.

There are, likewise, several small patented machines in use, which would not be trusted in silver milling, but which work reasonably well in gold milling. In short, gold milling, while it seldom yields the enormous profits which are sometimes, although seldom, made in the mining of silver or copper, can nevertheless be safely undertaken on a much humbler scale and by men of much smaller means.

The gross product of the mills now in operation will probably range from six to twenty thousand dollars each per month. But the increase is steady and the business will continue to grow for years to come. This opinion is fully borne out by observation, as well as by diligent investigation and inquiry. Judging from the present outlook, it is safe to conclude that the prospective augmentation in the gold product of the Pacific slope is destined to play an important part in the final adjustment of the problem of a metallic currency for this country and the world.—*San Francisco Cor. Old man Craig an inmate of the County Infirmary died last Wednesday and was consigned to the paupers burying ground, on the back part of the County farm.

There is at the Poorhouse a little negro girl, three years old who can repeat the Lords Prayer, word for word. A great deal more than a great many grown persons can do.

Those fellows who ran from the big sixteen last week will have to give bond or lay in jail, for their appearance at the next term of court. A bad stand is better than a good run, boys.

That Mr. A. G. Winston has greatly increased the productive qualities of the Collins farm near Burlington is evidenced by a crop of Irish potatoes thereon, which will make 200 bushels to the acre. In a few years under his control the farm will be restored to its primitive condition.

A Problem—A man bargained for a farm at $3,000 cash, but being unable to call in his money promptly he agreed with the vendue to pay him said amount together with 6 per cent. per annum interest thereon, in six equal payments, one payment cash, and one every year thereafter for five years. Will some reader of the Recorder tell me in said paper how much a payment will be?

M. S. R.

Just before going into a trial the other day a discussion rose as to the best way to proceed in regard to exceptions to some depositions. The Judge said:

"It will save time if these preliminary exceptions can be settled before we call the jury."

"I set no value upon time" replied Judge O'Hara.

"I have observed that before," responded the court—and the bar smiled.

William Collier, the boy who stole McConnell's horse, and whose case was continued at the last term of court, and bailed out by his father, put in his appearance last week, and his case was again continued. He and his father were coming through from Timble, by wagon and when near the Boone and Gallatin line the horse became frightened and upset the wagon, throwing the old gentleman out, breaking his arm and otherwise bruising him. The boy escaped without injury.

Judge Montfort should call the grand jury back before court adjourns, as they overlooked one very important thing in their report—that of condemning the little porch which hangs in front of the court-house, just above the door. This structure has been pronounced by the grand jury as being unsafe for the last four or five years, yet it still hangs. Now that the last g. j. neglected it entirely, it will be sure to fall upon some one, and then the county will have a big damage suit on its hands.

A letter with a special delivery stamp on it was received at the postoffice at this place one day last week, and as soon as received, Mr. Rouse, the genial postmaster, darted out the door with lightning speed, to deliver the letter, and came very near running over two or three persons on the street. After a few minutes run the gentleman's residence was reached, but sorry to say, he had gone to the country, and the p. m. almost out of breath was in a quandary, but was finally induced to wait until the gentleman returned, when the message was promptly delivered, in good order. People on the streets should keep a lookout for these special deliveries.

Circuit Court.

[illegible] a week of the Circuit Court, when we went to press, consequently our Circuit Court notes were very limited.

The first case on the Commonwealth docket was that of J. W. Grubb for shooting Paul Lampton. The defendant was over 60 years old, and was considerably impaired by age. It was so manifested that at recent [illegible] which Col. Landram filed a demurrer to it which was sustained, the indictment was quashed and the matter resubmitted to the grand jury.

When Grubbs was brought into court Judge Montfort stated that he had reason to believe that the condition of Mr. Grubb's mind was such that he ought not to be put upon trial in which his liberty was involved, and that he would therefore have an inquiry held, which was set for Wednesday morning. Wednesday morning a jury was empaneled and an inquest held, Mr. Grubbs managing his own case, in which he handled the lawyers and doctors without gloves, and throughout insisting that he was not attempting the Black Dickson insanity dodge. The jury was not out long till it returned a verdict saying John W. Grubbs was of sound mind, when the court remanded him to jail to await the action of the grand jury. The trial will go over till next spring.

In the case of the Commonwealth vs Henry Hall, an indictment for cutting John M. Finch in Burlington late in the afternoon of the last February county court day, the jury found Hall not guilty.

There were several small misdemeanor cases in which fines to the amount of $242 were assessed.

Thursday morning when the ordinary docket was reached and the call of cases began, it was discovered that neither litigants nor witnesses, except in one or two cases, were present. The Judge declared his intention to break up the tardiness on the part of the witnesses and litigants, and at once commenced continuing cases at the costs of the absent parties and ordering attachments for the absent witnesses, and the docket for that day was disposed of in short order, and the jurors discharged till next morning. The action of the Judge Wednesday bringing the parties to time, at the next term the business of the court will proceed without delay. When the docket is set for four or five months before the term every litigant can ascertain for what day his case is set for trial, and the Judge's course last Wednesday is calculated to impress it on their memory.

In the case of Younger Johnson's administrator vs. Younger Johnson's heirs, &c., the entire claim of Milley Jarrell for loaned money and labor was rejected.

The docket is well nigh cleaned up.

The petit jurors last week had but little work to do in the court-room.

The grand jury reindicted John W. Grubbs and his bond was fixed at $200.

The case of Thos. W. Marshall vs. J. R. Clutterbuck, for the recovery of the possession of 50 acres of land near Richwood Station, was continued. The record in this case is becoming very voluminous.

The case of the First National Bank of Covington, Ky., vs. Milton Gaines and W. W. Gaines' executor has been the legal fight of the term. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence the court gave the jury peremptory instruction in favor of the defendants. The bank will take the case to the Court of Appeals. The suit was for $13,000 the bank sought to recover off the defendants as sureties of Alonzo Gaines. The defendants plead non est facturn to the two notes on which their names appeared.

The grand jury devoted one solid week to the investigation of the moral condition of the county, returning late Saturday afternoon, 38 indictments as the result of its labors. Heretofore it has been the practice to read out the names of the parties indicted when the indictments were returned into court, but Saturday Judge Montfort admonished the clerk to keep the names of those indicted private.

Lizzie Glackin vs Lewis Conrad, judgement for plaintiff for $170.

James Thompson vs. Boone County Insurance Company, judgment for defendants cost, and an appeal granted to the Superior Court.

Daly Masters vs. Evan Anderson, judgment in favor of plaintiff for $75.

J. B. Johnson vs. John Maloney, &c, judgment in favor of Johnson for $22,75, and in favor of J. W. Kennedy for $167,25 of the money in J. S. Mason's hands.

In the case of C. Fannie Latham vs. R. E. Latham it was "ordered and adjudged that plaintiff, Mrs. C. Fannie Latham is hereby empowered to act as a feme sole and to make contracts, sue and be sued, trade in her own name, have hold and enjoy, and dispose of her property which she now has and may hereafter acquire by deed, conveyance or last will and testament as if she was a single woman."

The Moore will case was reached Saturday at noon. Afternoon the jury was empaneled and adjourned till Monday morning, but nothing was done until afternoon Monday when the battle commenced, but hostilities were shortly suspended to give the propounder time in which to get Rev. Bristow, a witness and one of the subscribing witnesses to the will. The jury is composed as follows: Ephraim Aylor, Wash Watts, H. C. Duncan, Allie Corn, R. L. Willis, Henry Clore, John Cleek, J. W. Conner, B. L. Rice, Wallace Garrison, John Aylor and Jno. S. Gaines. Tuesday the court ruled out the depositions of Revs. B. F. Bristow and C. W. Miller, the subscribing witnesses to the will, which resulted in a peremptory instruction to the jury, and the will was set aside.

I take this method of informing the people of the county, that I have apple, pear and plum trees, different varieties, at my nursery, near Grant, Boone Co., Ky., now ready for transplanting, and would be pleased to have you give me a call. I will make a delivery of trees at Burlington, the first Monday in November.

Report of Grand Jury.

To the Hon. Judge of the Boone Circuit Court:

We, the Grand Jury, respectfully report that we have spent six days in diligent enquiry; that we have examined 69 witnesses and have found thirty-eight indictments.

We believe from the testimony before us that the Parlor Grove Pic-nic Grounds under its present management have become a nuisance; that there the laws of our State and county are often violated with impunity by persons not citizens of our county; that the Sabbath is disregarded; that gambling is allowed, that drunkenness and disorder prevail and that its general effects are damaging to the interests of our people.

We find our public buildings as follows: The Circuit Clerks office we find in excellent condition; the County Clerks office is also in good condition. We find the floor of the county clerks office needs ventilating; also the floor of the court-house. We find the jail well kept, yet it needs some repairs.

We endorse the action of our County Commissioners to provide a suitable place in which to keep the necessary vegetables and fruit for our County Infirmary.

All of which we respectfully submit.

N. S. Walton, foreman.

A PRECIOUS MACHINE

The Modest Statements of a Strictly Truthful Hardware Clerk.

It was plain to see by his looks and actions that he had no idea of purchasing a lawn mower. He might, possibly, have been argued into buying two papers of tacks for five cents, or a summer thermometer at slaughter prices, but it wasn't likely that he even had a lawn to mow. And yet he came to a sudden halt before a hardware store, slid up to three or four specimen mowers on exhibition, and a minute later he was making a close examination. A clerk came out and said:

"Good morning. We have a few left, but they are going like hot cakes."

The man seized the handle of one of the mowers and pushed the machine back and forth.

"Any child can run it," observed the clerk, "and you notice that it makes no more noise than a sewing machine."

The man upset the machine on its back and spent three minutes investigating.

"Nothing to get out of order, sir," continued the clerk as he bowed to a good-looking woman. "We warrant this machine for two years, and will replace any part that breaks."

The man stood the machine up on one wheel and squinted and examined some more.

"Cuts through the heaviest grass and cuts closer than any other machine made. We are willing to let you have it for a week on trial."

The man counted the places for oiling the bearings. There were four of them.

"Over eighteen thousand of these machines were sold last year," said the clerk, as he menaced a dog with a hoe-handle. "It has taken more first-class premiums than any other machine in the world. The best is always the cheapest."

The man pushed the machine a few feet away from him, thrust his hands deep into his pockets and seemed about to whistle, but he didn't.

"I can give you a list of two hundred and thirty prominent citizens who have used them," said the clerk, as he flirted with a woman on a passing street car. "Don't be deceived into buying an inferior machine. The lawns of the nobility of England are mowed with this machine."

The man suddenly advanced and seized the handle of the machine.

"This machine sharpens itself, and the only care needed is to oil it now and then. Those who have used them the longest would not part with them for double the cost price."

The machine was pushed and pulled.

"We not only guarantee the machine but the price shall be made perfectly satisfactory," said the clerk, as he waved off a boot-black. "What is the use of paying twenty dollars for a lawn mower which will get out of order in half an hour? Beware of base imitations. There are machines in this market which are not worth the cost of sending home by an express wagon. Let me have your number and I will send this one up on trial. If it doesn't work—"

The clerk turned to look for the man but he had been gone a minute and a half.—Detroit Free Press.

BRAVE YEOMEN.

Washington's Prophetic Exclamation After the Battle of Bunker Hill.

It was the 15th day of June, 1775, that George Washington was chosen Commander-in-Chief of the American army. The next day he made his answer to Congress, in which he declared he accepted the office but that he would take no pay. He left Philadelphia on his way to Boston, June 21, escorted by a troop of horsemen and accompanied by Schuyler and Lee, who had just been made Major-Generals by Congress. They had gone about twenty miles when they saw a man on horseback coming rapidly down the road. It was a messenger riding post-haste to Philadelphia and carrying to Congress news of the battle of Bunker Hill. Everybody was stirred by the news and wanted to know the particulars.

"Why were the Provincials compelled to retreat?" he was asked.

"It was for want of ammunition," he replied.

"Did they stand the fire of the regular troops?" asked Washington, anxiously.

"That they did and held their own fire in reserve until the enemy was within eight rods."

"Then the liberties of the country are safe!" exclaimed Washington. He remembered well the scenes under Braddock and he knew what a sight it must have been to those New England farmers when a compact body of uniformed soldiers came marching up from the boats at Charlestown. If they could stand fearlessly there was stuff in them for soldiers.—Horace E. Scudder, in St. Nicholas.

A Man Who Loved His Prison.

Warden McComb, of the California State prison at Folsom, has been planning extensive improvements in the prison grounds and has had the hearty co-operation of Harry, the convict gardener. At the height of the work Harry's term expired, and though he begged hard to stay, he was sent to San Francisco a free man. Within ten days a deputy sheriff brought Harry back. "I've come to stay this time, General," he shouted, gleefully; "they ain't smart enough to keep me away from the garden." He had pleaded guilty to thefts enough to get a very long sentence within his beloved prison walls.—Sacramento Bee.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating voraciously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood; and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed form the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. Schwartz & Haslett, Pittsburg, Pa.,
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family. Yours, &c.,

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

EARTHQUAKE HORRORS.

Their Record in Ancient and Modern Times.

Human Prevention Suggested—Suddenness of the Casualties—The Earthquakes at Lima, Callao, Lisbon and in the United States.

The rapidity with which the earthquake destroys is one of its most horrible features. The cyclone is slow and the conflagration dull, compared with the fearful celerity of the earthquake. The shock seldom lasts longer than a few seconds, sometimes a minute, yet its power can compass the destruction of magnificent cities whose structures have stood for centuries, and territories are distorted and shorn of their beauty and productiveness, hills are made valleys and valleys hills, rivers are dried up and yawning rifts open in the solid earth from which flames and smoke issue.

In Calabria a whole district of country covered with flourishing towns, fertile, rich and happy, was in a few seconds converted into a dismal waste. At that time the most strange distortions of nature took place. Cities upon hills were hurled down into the valley below, the vales were converted into mountains and lakes. Where hills had existed vales came to displace them, fields were removed with all their growing crops and the laborers in their midst to strange and distant places. Sand spread over their fields, and the distortion of the landscape was so great that the survivors did not recognize their own homes.

The earthquake does not always give an intimation of its coming. The most experienced observer can not foretell by any signs in the earth or sky when the dreaded visitation is at hand. Sometimes it comes when the summer days are cloudless and bright, and when the stars look serenely upon the earth in all the splendor of a tropical night. It comes at other times when the air is thick and cloudy, and heavy clouds fill the sky. Winter and summer are alike subject to its visitation; like death it has all seasons for its own. The inhabitants of Lima supposed they could foretell an earthquake by the circumstance of the rats running more swiftly among the rafters of the house than usual, but their frequent visitations were preceded by different signs and tokens both in animate and inanimate nature every time. Both science and observation, the wise philosopher and the presuming empiric, have failed alike in establishing any law by which the dread calamity may be predicted.

The cause of earthquakes is also unknown. Although theories without number have been advanced upon the subject, the most vigorous of human intellects have labored in vain to form some adequate estimate concerning their origin and cause. The Chaldeans were in the habit of attributing them to the influence of the stars. The ancient philosopher supposed them to be the imprisoned floods and winds in the center of the earth, which rent the earth in their efforts to get out. Des Cartes first advanced the theory of inflamed gas seeking an outlet, and Mons. Thomas in his excellent work, "Memoire sur les causes des Tremblements de Terre," thought they were caused by large quantities of illuminous and sulphurous gas becoming suddenly inflamed, breaking forth in violent fermentation, but modern geologians assert that the globe upon which we live is nearly a thin crust of solid matter, inclosing a mass of molten fire that has a constant tendency to expand, and that the restless fires now [illegible] their limitations and [illegible] of burning lava [illegible] earthquake and rupture the outer crust in [illegible] fury.

Whether earthquakes can be prevented by any human means is a question that has occupied scientific minds in every age. Pliny tells that ancient writers on the subject thought they had lighted upon a certain prevention of the destructive convulsions of the earth that had baffled the devices of the learned. If the earthquake came from imprisoned air and water, what more natural than to seek a means of vent for the prisoners. They began therefore to dig deep pits along the sea shore, and these reaching into the depth of the earth acted as safety valves for the accumulated vapors. This project was, however, abandoned, fearing it would produce the very evil it was intended to remedy.

Volcanoes have often been supposed to be an outlet for these gases and a protection against earthquakes, as the lands of the earthquake are those of the volcanic crater and burning mountain. Humboldt, Daubeny and others have accepted the theory that Italy and Sicily were shielded from danger by the constant eruptions of Vesuvius and Etna, for it was observed that when these mountains began to pour forth lava the quivering earth found repose. Yet those who look upon the volcano as a protection from the earthquake must be led to doubt their efficiency when it is remembered that Vesuvius and Etna have failed to save Southern Europe from the most dire destruction. One of the greatest earthquakes of the Pacific coast was ushered in by a general eruption of all the fiery peaks of the Andes. One after another the mountain tops flamed forth in a long and terrible line, sending up masses of molten or red-hot rocks, and blackening the sky with sulphurous gases, and against the dark sky lurid tongues of flame shot up in weird splendor, and streams of burning lava seamed the mountain sides, while far below them the upheaving earth was shaken and riven, and covered with the ruin of men's works, while man himself lay prostrate in death, and the tidal wave swept away all the traces of the earth's desolation. How the mysterious attendant, the tidal wave, is connected with the earthquake, is scarcely known. It is produced by a disturbance at the bottom of the ocean, and in all instances of an earthquake the ocean gives more or less indications of disturbance, vessels have been shaken and struck as by an invisible blow, when far from port. Smoke and flames have issued from the midst of the waves; the sea has been discolored, and the waters roll black as ink, volcanoes rise above them for a moment, and then, as at Juan Fernandez, disappear. Or islands start up and are slowly molded from the fire stained rocks to the fertile habitations of man, and it is quite probable that this rise and fall of the ocean's bed produces the tidal wave. The history of the earthquake dates back for nearly three thousand years. Among the most ancient those of mythology are probably derived from a more authentic source than the imaginations of poets or traditional lore. Thucydides gives an account of a shock that was unheeded by the combatants when Hannibal was conquering at Thrasymene, and the great earthquake that shattered Tyre and the cities of Asia in the fourth year of Tiberius. The first ominous quiver that half ruined Pompeii and Herculaneum in the year 67, twelve years before the final eruption of the hitherto harmless Vesuvius. The fearful earthquakes in the reign of Justinian in (527,565), of which Gibbon gives an account, Nivenzio gives a lamentable account of the earthquakes that have devastated the different sections of the world since the discovery of America.

Lima alone has suffered fourteen times from this cause. The city of Lima has been painted by those who visited it when it was under Spanish rule in the last century as one of the fairest of cities. Its climate was like that of an Arabian paradise, so balmy and soft. No chilling breath of winter ever visited its people. No rain ever fell there, but instead an impalpable vail of mist that came from the sea in the day fell in gentle dew at night upon the thirsty land to preserve the vegetation and temper the climate, and it was only at rare intervals that the permanent moisture was dissipated and the heat was felt to be uncomfortable. It was on a plain, six miles above the level of the sea, "a terrestial paradise," said a traveler. Looking down upon a landscape of wonderful fertility, where orange groves and tropical flowers bloomed in prodigal profusion. The surrounding country was rich in all that was required to give life and luxury to the happy Peruvians. The city, designed with taste and care, with its broad streets and tropical foliage, was one of the most splendid that the American continent could boast. There was situated the palace of the Viceroy of the Spanish possessions, who ruled with regal sway over his South American subjects. Lima was therefore the center to which flowed the wealth, the beauty and fashion of the land. Rich with the spoils of the Incas and the products of their own mines was the city and its inhabitants. Its plaza was adorned by the magnificent palace of the Viceroy and a cathedral of rare splendor, by a fountain supported by brazen lions and a range of public buildings unsurpassed by any structure in Europe. Nor was there a gayer metropolis. The houses were low adobe dwellings, inclosing a court, which a fountain and tropical foliage made like a dream of the orient. There, under the splendor of the summer sky, the dance, and song, and music of the mandolin beguiled the perfect nights.

The fair Peruvians were famed for their superb dresses of lace and silk, their ornaments of pearls and diamonds were in accordance with the wealth and good fortunes of their fathers and husbands. Nor were they negligent of the devout observance of the Roman religion. So that the tide of "their mirth and their occupations" flowed on incessantly in a tranquil stream day after day.

A road of six miles in length led down to Callao, the seaport of Lima. The town was upon a slope of the low shore and numbered about five thousand inhabitants. It was a gay and busy place, with a good harbor that was scarcely needed for the shelter of vessels, so peaceful was the sea. For the languid waves of the quiet Pacific scarcely rippled against the shore. The town had its palace and public buildings that, while they were not equal in splendor to those of Lima, filled the hearts of the seaport townsmen with pride. The road that ran back to Lima was lined with gardens and villas, and was usually filled with merry muleteers and the wealthy citizens driving in their calaches. Such were Lima and Callao in October, 1746. Earthquakes had come, gone, and been forgotten. The people of Lima had built their grand structures and repaired all traces of formed disaster, and the inhabitants of Callao slept by the side of their tranquil sea in dreams of peace and perfect security.

It was on October 28, at 10:30 at night, when the cities of Lima and Callao slept, a calm and starlight night when the shock came; instantly the people rushed forth from their dwellings, and the cry of "the earthquake" came from pale and terror-stricken people as they rushed wildly about, not knowing where to go for shelter and safety. Four minutes served to shake Lima to the ground, and of the three thousand buildings, not twenty were left standing. The whole city had crumbled into dust. The churches and monasteries, the palace of the Viceroy, the pleasant adobe dwellings, had fallen and crushed their inmates in many instances, and those who had sought escape in flight were overwhelmed by the falling structures that buried over a thousand victims beneath their ruins, and there, amid the desolation of destruction, the cry of the dying and bereaved, the survivors awaited the coming of the dawn. With the dawn came the terrible tidings that Callao had been swept away by a tidal wave, and only a waste of sand filled the site of the flourishing seaport, with its harbor, its ramparts, and places beside the peaceful ocean that had risen in its might and swept it with wave after wave from off the earth. The new Callao that was afterward built was on a different site, far away from the terrible memories of the past. At the time of the great earthquake, in 1755, Lisbon was a far more important city than it is now, with a remnant of its past glory when it had been the center of commerce and culture in the sixteenth century. It was then more the peer of London or Paris than any other city in Southern Europe. Those who noticed the course of nature just before the earthquake at Lisbon had observed that in several years the land had shown various signs of volcanic action. The weather was dry and oppressive, springs had ceased to flow where they once existed in abundance, and the earth had frequently trembled with slight shocks. Yet never had Lisbon been more heedless of danger than at the moment of its destruction. For more than a century and a half it had known no catastrophe. The tall houses, four or five stories high, with their open balconies stretching over the narrow streets, had stood to shelter generations. The royal palaces, richly adorned with furniture of gold and silver, and stored with gems and diamonds had been built with no expectation of their destruction, and its churches, more elaborate still than its palaces, were decked with the spoils of the Indies. In its two great squares were palaces and public buildings and the magnificent Church of the Dominicans. The corridors and dungeons of the Holy Inquisition marked the greater circuit of them. The Ruccio was placed in the center of the city, and it was here that some of the most fatal accidents of the earthquake occurred.

The morning of November 1, 1755, broke fair and warm over Lisbon. A soft east wind blew and the sky was cloudless. It was a high festival of the Roman Church, the chapels and cathedrals were filled with throngs of worshipers. The English merchants had not yet gone to their counting-houses, and the royal family were still in the palace. Suddenly a roar was heard like the peal of countless thunder-bolts, a terrible shock struck the city, and it fell. The royal family had time to leave the palace ere it fell in dust and remnants. The magnificent churches swayed backwards and forwards ere they fell upon the worshipers and crushed them in their ruins. The tall houses were dashed down upon the narrow streets, burying their inmates who strove to flee from the tottering walls. A sudden darkness brooded over the city, where the air was filled with dust, the shrieks of the dying, the wail of the living and the cry of the fallen metropolis. It is estimated that more than thirty thousand perished in that awful moment. Many of the survivors were killed by the fall of the buildings as they fled wildly through the streets. Nobles, fair women, priests, monks and nuns, peasant and slave, who were yet unhurt, fled in one vast throng to the open public square, where forty thousand miserable human beings found a temporary refuge. But now another horror came upon them. A solid wall of water, the tidal wave, advanced and swept thousands away into the ocean. Again they, the survivors, fled from the accursed city, clambering over ruins, over the heaps of wounded and dying, forgetting the ties of nature and the claims of friendship, leaving the weak, the aged and women and children to die from injuries or the excess of terror. To complete the horror of the situation, the city took fire from the burning candles of the fallen churches, that kindled from the altar clothes and dresses of the dead, so that the substance of the rich and poor, the booty of the dishonest, the costly offerings of the pious, all melted swiftly away. What the earthquake and the tidal wave had left was totally consumed. At the time when Lisbon fell a general commotion prevailed over a wide circle of sea and land. Cadiz was swept by a tidal wave that carried away many of its people. Milan was severely shaken, and some of its buildings destroyed. The firm rock of Gibraltar trembled violently. In Switzerland and along the Rhine, and even in Holland, the shock was felt. Northern Africa felt it also, and the city of Meginez was destroyed. Far out upon the Atlantic the waters were disturbed with flame and smoke. Even Boston felt it so perceptibly as to drive people from their homes in consternation. In 1811 almost every part of the United States was shaken by an earthquake. It was a year of terror. Fierce-looking comets swept across the sky, and hurricanes of sleet and snow desolated Massachusetts and Long Island, and the terrible consciousness that the earth beneath them was in commotion brooded everywhere. From all parts the news came to New York and Philadelphia that the land was being shaken by earthquakes. The first shock occurred at Washington December 16, at about 2:30 in the morning. Houses were shaken, doors and windows rattled, men grew sick and giddy, and fears of a great catastrophe filled every mind. At Richmond the bells in the houses rang, and the people arose in terror. At Columbia, S. C., houses rocked and quivered and had the plastering shaken from the walls. At Charleston a rumbling sound was heard like distant thunder, and the bell in St. Philip's steeple was rung by its agency. In Savannah there was rumbling like distant thunder and flashes of light in the air. In Louisville chimneys were shaken down, and life was in evident danger. The springs of fresh water in Kentucky were tainted with sulphur, and the shock extended over Ohio, Michigan and Illinois. The next year, 1812, January 23, the earthquake was felt anew, principally at Richmond, Charleston, Pittsburgh and New Madrid, where fissures six feet wide opened in the earth. But this was all. No lives were lost and no great injury was done to property.

These are only a few of the instances of the earthquake in history. Its fearful and instantaneous destruction, its unannounced approach, its inscrutable origin, its awful voice, the horrors of its tidal wave, and the fury of its hurricane have made it the terror of all ages.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

POWDERLY TALKS.

The Grand Master Workman of the Knights of Labor Reviews the Growth and Educational Necessities of the Order. Why He Opposed the Railroad and Eight-Hour Strikes.

RICHMOND, Oct. 6.—The only work transacted in the National Assembly of Knights of Labor yesterday was the adoption of the report of the committee on credentials.

Mr. Powderly's address has already been made public. The Grand Master opened his address by saying that the laws of the order require the General Master Workman to submit at the general assembly a report of his official acts during the year, but for him to do that would be impossible, for the reason, among others, that such a report would take at least four weeks' time to prepare. For information as to details of the Executive Board's actions the convention is referred to the various reports to be presented, and the Master Workman proceeds to consider matters of importance and make such suggestions as he deems necessary. The address proceeds:

"If we are guided by the experience of the past, and act accordingly, we can place the order upon a footing so safe and sure that no assaults from its enemies can injure it. If we are not guided by that experience and close this general assembly without having improved on the past we will fail to properly represent those who sent us here. The rapid increase in membership since the Hamilton session of the general assembly has been most marvelous, 4,000 assemblies having been organized. Thousands have been attracted toward the order through motives of sympathy; others have come for purely selfish motives, while the great bulk of our new recruits joined for the good they could do. Quite a few have entered our order for the purpose of redressing existing wrongs, and before waiting to learn anything concerning the duty of the Knights of the order, have plunged into rash and ill-considered strikes. The car drivers of St. Louis were organized under promise of the organizer that they would receive aid instituted in case of a strike. Even before the receipt of their charter they were on strike. Their proceedings were characterized by such utter disregard for our teachings that the paid and well known agents of their employers had no difficulty in securing the passage of motions of a violent character. It is an established fact that men who were employed by detective agencies stood upon the floor of that assembly urging the men to deeds of violence and that the property of the street car companies be destroyed. For these outrages the order was in no way responsible.

"The Southwest strike began when the time and attention of the general officers were taken up with other matters of vital importance. No notice of the contemplated action was given to us, and we knew nothing whatever concerning it or the causes leading to it until it had been in progress several days. It has been asserted that I condemned the men while they were on strike. No such statement ever passed my lips. I did not approve of the strike, since confidence enough was not reposed in the Executive Board to give them a chance to examine into grievances complained of. It was only when the threat was made to stop every wheel in the United States that I raised my voice in denial. I did that in defense of the order and the country, and would do the same thing again under similar circumstances.

"The eight-hour strike which took place May 1 was not successful except in cases where employes and employers were acting in harmony, or where employers were willing to adopt the plan. In many cases the old system of working long hours has been revived. I cautioned our members against rushing into this movement, and am firm in the belief that had I not done so great loss would have been entailed upon vast numbers of our assemblies. I have been accused of opposing the eight-hour movement. No statement was ever further from the truth. I opposed the strike on May 1 because the education which must always precede intelligent action had not been given to those in need of it, and because no definite business-like plan for the inauguration of the movement had been mapped out. For these same reasons do I still oppose it. A reduction of the hours of labor is a necessity, and sooner or later must be had, but we must not forget that in many places the ten-hour plan has not been adopted yet. The very discussion of the sudden introduction of the eight-hour plan injured business. Millions of dollars' worth of work was left undone because of the uncertainty in regard to taking contracts. The move was in the right direction, but the time and circumstances were not suitable. Before the eight-hour plan is adopted the Knights of Labor and the trade unions of America must lay aside their jealousies and their differences, come together and adopt a plan of action, which must be gradual and such as will not inflict injury upon either employer or employe. Before a short hour system that will be of any benefit to mankind can be inaugurated the relation which the workman bears to the labor-saving machine must undergo a radical change. A plan of co-operation through which the workmen may control the machine he operates must one day supersede the present system.

"The question of child labor and education is the most important that can come before us now or at any time. To make the necessary progress we must see that the child has an education. It should be a part of every assembly's duty to ascertain the number of children who do not attend school in its vicinity, learn what the causes are, and take steps to remedy the evil. It is useless to labor for the establishment of a co-operative system when we lack the business training necessary to operate it. I ask that a special committee be appointed to prepare a plan for the better education of the American youth."

The address then refers to the trouble with trades unions, which Mr. Powderly said has been exaggerated and distorted, while admitting that there have been faults on both sides. He recommends that in the future all matters of dispute between the Knights and other societies be submitted to the executives of both organizations for settlement, and, above all things, let a speedy and impartial investigation be made. Mr. Powderly then replies as follows to the criticisms of which he has been made the subject:

"I have never during the seven years that I have served as General Master Workman made a member of this order a subject of personal or public criticism or abuse. I have made it a rule never to speak in criticism, harsh or otherwise, of a man, except when standing face to face with him. I have been accused of displaying a 'lack of nerve,' of 'want of backbone,' and of being too 'weak a man to lead a strong movement.' If, while holding a position such as no man living or dead ever held before, I have displayed a lack of nerve or backbone, why is it that a million men and women of nerve, of backbone and common sense have gathered around the standard which was placed in my hands seven years ago? If I have been proved a weak man why do so many strong men support me? By men who are not Knights of Labor I have been called weak because I discountenanced violence and hasty, ill-advised action. I have no excuse to offer, for if this is an offense, let the general assembly itself offer the apology. I will now speak as I have never spoken to a session of the general assembly before. Representatives have been instructed to vote for me for General Master Workman. I feel complimented, but release every member from his obligation to vote for me. You are free to vote for any other man you choose, and if you act in accordance with my wishes you will select another to fill my place. In voting for the General Master Workman don't be guided by sentiment or sympathy, but vote for the best interests of God's suffering poor and the cause of united labor."

Four Children Injured.

LEWISTON, Me., Oct. 6.—An extraordinary calamity happened here yesterday. Rev. J. W. Twort, pastor of the Free-Will Baptist Church, was experimenting with a magic lantern for the amusement of his children, when he incautiously brought a rubber apparatus containing hydrogen into contact with the flame of the lantern. A terrific explosion ensued. The glass front of the house was blown away a distance of twenty feet into the street, the stove was shattered and the furniture was broken in pieces. Four children received internal injuries of a serious nature.

Increased Circulation of the Silver Dollar.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—The silver-dollar circulation of the United States, which was slightly below $60,000,000 on September 30, has now passed the limit, being far greater than ever before in the history of the country. The treasury officials say that it may rise as high as $65,000,000 and then decline as rapidly as the new silver certificates are put out.

MRS. FREMONT.

The Devotion of This Strong-Minded Woman to Her Husband's Interests.

Mrs. Fremont's figure is too stout to be graceful—she always had a tendency to amplitude—and this, with her white hair, gives her a grand maternal air, which is in accordance with the fact. At first she strikes you as older than sixty-two. After talking with her for a while you think she must be younger. Her mind is so fresh, alert and sparkling as when she was twenty-five, it is affluent in resources. I have often heard her called one of the most intellectual women in America.

When Fremont visited California after Buchanan's election, and at the end of two or three years went to Europe, his wife accompanied him, of course. He and she have been inseparable, except where circumstances absolutely forbade their being together. She was anxious to join him in his early explorations into the wilds of the then unknown West, in which the strongest men nearly perished, and she would have gone, but for the fear of making her husband ridiculous—almost the only fear of which she is capable. Courage, physical as well as moral, is one of her most valiant traits. It is a paternal inheritance, and is what Napoleon called of the two-o'clock-in-the-morning order. She would have been only too happy to follow her husband's fortunes in the field, and was restrained only by the consideration I have named. She and her son, then a small boy, were with him, and slept in the same tent, when he was in Missouri in 1861, and ironical soldiers frequently spoke of her as being his chief of staff. She is capable of carrying a musket, and using it, and I am confident she would lead any forlorn hope, particularly if its object were to advance her husband's prospects. She is without the weaknesses so prominent in many women's characters, and for the ordinary woman she has little liking. Her natural preference is for the society of men, because they are less frivolous, broader and have higher aims. The stronger and more intellectual class of women she affects, and numbers many of them among her dearest friends. But she has no sympathy with what is known as woman's rights.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

WIND VS. STEAM.

Recent Experiments With Improved American Sailing Vessels.

Notwithstanding the improvements in steam navigation, transportation by sailing vessels is so much cheaper, that new experiments are being tested in wind-driven crafts. On the lakes, it has been found economical to use large grain vessels, those which ply between Chicago and Buffalo, carry five masts. There is now building a five-masted schooner for salt water with a carrying capacity of three thousand tons. The competition between Russian and American petroleum is making both nations do all they can to cheapen that useful and wonderful product of nature. While Americans have heretofore sent the refined oil to the rest of the world in barrels, the Russians have sent it out in bulk, making a large saving thereby. Several American vessels have been fitted up to carry oil to Europe also in bulk. As steam is costly and fire dangerous, it is proposed to build a six-masted schooner that will carry one hundred thousand cans of oil. Mineral oil, by the way, is very cheap. At last accounts, crude petroleum was selling at sixty cents a barrel. This is a remarkable boon to the poor of all countries, who have now a brilliant illuminant cheaper than was the old tallow dip.—Demorest's Monthly.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

The Artificial Manufacture of Quinine, According to Hewett's Plan.

A remarkable discovery, by which the price of quinine may be reduced to something like six cents per ounce, has been made by Mr. Cresswell Hewett. The synthetical manufacture of quinine was first suggested to Mr. Hewett, in 1869, by the late Dr. Mattheson, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, while giving his assistance in a course of experiments in connection with apomorphia. Subsequently, Prof. Parkes, of Netley, aided with his advice, and to these gentlemen, rather than to himself, Mr. Cresswell Hewett modestly explains that the process is due. The importance of this discovery is rendered greater by the fact that while hitherto we have been depending for our quinine on the cultivation of the cinchona tree, from whose bark only about two per cent. of good quinine can be extracted, ninety-eight per cent. being valueless, the drug can now be manufactured without limit by a very simple process from an article which can always be got in abundance in any part of the world.—London Lancet.

Mme. Janauschek's Advice.

"Young ladies, I fancy, ask your advice as to their going on the stage?" "Yes, hundreds. Every week some girl comes and asks me: 'Madame, I want to go on the stage; shall I?'" "And you answer?" "I answer: 'No, no, no, my child; no.' They know nothing of the life of the stage, its temptations and its hard work. They see us only at night, nicely dressed, and with every thing perfect. They know no more. I have been thirty-three years on the stage, and I say there is no life like it. It has no happiness, it leaves you no time for domestic or social pleasure, no time for any thing but work, work, work. I was once a good pianist. But for years I have hardly touched a piano. I love to draw, but there is no time ever. All is work and travel, travel and work. To girls who think of going on the stage again, I say no, no."—Philadelphia Press.

Duration of Infectiousness.

The duration of the infectious stages of various diseases is thus given by Dr. J. F. Pearse, an English physician: Measles, from the second day of the disease, for three weeks; small-pox, from the fourth day, for four weeks; scarlet fever, from the fourth day, for seven weeks; mumps, from the second day, for three weeks; diphtheria, from the first day for three weeks. The incubation periods, or intervals occurring between exposure to infection and the first symptoms, are as follows: Whooping cough, fourteen days; mumps, eighteen days; measles, ten days; small-pox, twelve days; scarlet fever, three days; diphtheria, fourteen days.—[illegible]

100 Doses One Dollar

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

THE BIG STRIKE ENDED

By the Peremptory Order of the Knights of Labor.

And Hereafter Ten Hours Will Be a Day's Work for the Chicago Packers.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—The strike of the packing house workmen was formally ended this afternoon. The strikers held a mass meeting on the prairie about 3 o'clock, at which between 10,000 and 14,000 men were present. A proposition to return to work on the 10-hour plan was carried almost unanimously and the strike was declared at an end. Shortly afterward, Mr. Barry, the Knight of Labor delegate, waited on Mr. Armour and said the strike was at end and that the men would return to work to-morrow morning without making any conditions. The packing house owners will keep all their new men and by running the houses up to their full capacity expect to be able to retain in their employ nearly all the old men. By the time the meeting on the prairie was about to be called to order by Mr. Barry this proposed surrender had been divined, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the men were sufficiently quieted to permit Barry's voice to be heard. He stepped to the front of the stage and took a sheet of paper from his pocket. The crowd guessed its contents, and a shower of groans and hisses followed the movement. Not in the least taken aback the delegate came down upon a table with a gavel in so decisive a manner as to restore sufficient order for the hurried reading of the order for the men to go to work at ten hours a day. A howl went up at the reading of the paper that could be heard for blocks. Again, with difficulty, Mr. Barry secured quiet. "This is the order of the Knights of Labor. You will return to your several shops to-morrow morning, every one of you." This was delivered with unmistakable emphasis. Some cool-headed delegates arose at this point and counseled the men to obey. A vote was taken on the question. The affirmative vote was very weak, but there were no dissenting voices. Mr. Barry immediately stepped into a carriage and drove down to P. D. Armour's city office. The packer received him courteously and listened attentively while he related the brief story of the ending of the strike. Then Mr. Barry put the query to Mr. Armour: "Will you dispense with the services of your new men if the old employes return to-morrow?" Mr. Armour emphatically declared that not one of the new men would be supplanted, if they desired to remain. He added that the beef butchers upon their return must work ten hours or not at all. This evening Mr. Armour, to stand by his oft-made assertion that the packers could better afford a concession to the beef men than to the pork men, instructed his manager to give all the beef men who return to work to-morrow an advance of 50 cents per day over the old rates. Some time after the strike had been declared at an end, announcement was made that the packers had adopted a winter schedule of wages, to go into effect immediately. This is equivalent to a temporary advance of 10 per cent. The scale ordinarily does not take effect until the middle of November.

Great Snakes.

BOSTON, Oct. 18.—The twenty-nine-and-one-half foot python which recently got away in City Hall Park, New York, again escaped this morning while being transferred from his box to a cage at a museum here. Crawling under the stage, the snake broke away several boards, entered the cellar, got into the cold-air box of the furnace and burst open its sides, the bricks flying in all directions. Four men seized him, and after a terrible struggle, lasting an hour and a half, they succeeded in caging him. During the fight the python wound himself around two thick joists and snapped them as easily as if they were only pipe-stems. He hit one man in the wrist, and squeezed the breath out of another by jamming him against the wall.

Mad With Thirst.

BEAUMONT, TEX., Oct. 18.—A new danger seems to have sprung up in the vicinity of Sabine that has scared the searchers for the unfortunates. The cattle have become dangerous wild animals. The watering pools have been filled with sea water and the cattle are wild with thirst. Saturday evening a steer chased three men who were walking along the edge of the bayou and would probably have killed them if they had not succeeded in reaching their boat. When the steer saw he was foiled he seemed to become more furious, ploughing up the earth with his horns and bellowing loudly.

The Storm in Ireland.

BELFAST, Oct. 18.—The low-lying districts of Ulster are submerged. The gale on the Irish coast continues unabated, compelling all vessels to seek shelter. Limerick advices say the Malcair river drainage works burst, flooding the adjacent district and destroying valuable crops. Much damage was done by the hurricane on the northwest coast of France. Many steamers were compelled to postpone their departure.

World's Championship Ball Games.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—The first game of a series of seven, between the Chicagos, champions of the League Association, and Browns, of St. Louis, champions of the American Association, for the championship of the world and $10,000, was played here this afternoon. Following is the score: Chicagos, 6; St. Louis, 0. There were between three thousand and five thousand people present at the commencement of the game.

A Panther Runs Amuck.

Gypsy Emigrants Denied a Landing.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Commissioner of Emigration Starr is to-day refused to allow forty-three Gypsies who arrived to-day on the Netherland steamship W. A. Scholter, from Rotterdam, to land, and ordered them sent back to the steamer. The Scholter will now have to board and keep them until she returns to Rotterdam.

Marriage of the Governor of Maryland.

CAMBRIDGE, MD., Oct. 18.—Governor Henry Lloyd was married to-day to Miss Mary E. Staplefort, also of this old town. They will make a short wedding tour before going to Annapolis to reside in the Executive Mansion.

—A wealthy merchant of London has recently celebrated a novel kind of golden-wedding. Having been a faithful reader of two or three London newspapers for a period of fifty years, he invited the proprietors to a magnificent banquet. The host stated that the perusal of newspapers for fifty years had been the most agreeable distraction of his long life. This recognition of the press is without a precedent.

—Dr. Marler, of Rome, has discovered in many of the skulls in the different Roman and Etruscan tombs, as well as those deposited in various museums, interesting specimens of ancient dentistry and artificial teeth. These latter are in most cases carved out of the teeth of some large animal. In many instances these teeth are fastened to the natural ones by bands of gold. No cases of stopped teeth have been discovered.

OF NO EARTHLY USE.

The English Sparrow and the Bobolink, Pests That Should be Exterminated.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—The material is largely in hand in the newly organized division of economic ornithology of the Department of Agriculture for a series of bulletins upon the relations of several common species of birds in this country to agriculture. The evidence collected will have a strong tendency in some cases to upset widely prevalent notions respecting the habits and value of certain birds, in others to lead to organized efforts for the mitigation or extinction of pests which threaten destruction to valuable branches of agriculture. In the latter category Dr. C. H. Merriam, the head of the division, places the English sparrow as chief. This bird was imported with a flourish of praise some years ago, as an agent for the protection of shade trees from the ravages of caterpillars, inchworms and other creeping things, and has so multiplied and developed among its new surroundings as to become, Dr. Merriam thinks, a vast greater scourge than the one it was expected to counteract. Its present rate of increase is enormous, and the new territory which it invades is estimated at more than [illegible] square miles annually. It is essentially a town bird, nestling almost exclusively about and upon the projections of buildings, but it takes long vacations during the fruit-growing seasons, and wreaks its fastidious appetite upon the largest and juciest of grapes and the daintiest of tree fruits, in which work of destruction its aggregate of damages is almost incomputable. How best to prevent its further increase and curtail its ravaging propensities is an unsolved problem. It may be shot or poisoned, or it may be despoiled of its nest, but neither plan promises permanent relief. It is a wary and suspicious creature, readily learning to avoid places where any of its fellows met their fate, while, as if in anticipation of future necessities, it has within the last year or two begun to study and practice the art of nest-building in trees. The bobolink of the North (the rice bird of the South) has been receiving much closer attention from the ornithologist and his correspondents. This cheerful creature is found to be rather helpful to the Northern grain-growers, an examination of its maw disclosing the fact that it does not care for the growing grain, but lives upon the seeds of destructive weeds and equally destructive field insects. But it sometimes its annual migration as to pass about three weeks in the rice fields of the South, at the season when that grain is in the milky state, and there its ravages are enormous. The estimated annual loss to the rice planters from the depredations of this bird is between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

A MILLION-DOLLAR FIRE.

The Town of Salisbury, Md., Being Swept Out by the Flames.

SALISBURY, MD., Oct. 17.—A fire, which started in a small frame stable about 7 o'clock to-night, swept over the entire business portion of the village. A brisk wind from the southeast spread the flames rapidly, while the inhabitants stood by powerless to prevent the destruction, as the dry frame buildings burned too fiercely to be checked by the small apparatus. Assistance has been asked from Crisfield, and Wilmington, Del., but at a late hour to-night it looks as though the entire village would be destroyed. It is impossible to enumerate the property lost at this late hour, but a rough guess places the damage at over $1,000,000. Stores with their contents were licked up by the flames, and the streets to-night are full of people whose homes have been destroyed. At midnight the fire is still burning fiercely, and there seems to be no hope of staying its progress. No lives have been lost so far as can be learned.

CANADA ALARMED.

Something Must Be Done to Protect Her Against American "Tourists."

OTTAWA, ONT., Oct. 17.—The enormous influx of United States forgers, defaulters and swindlers into Canada within the past month or so has roused the authorities to taking further action in urging upon the British Government the necessity of arranging extradition treaty with the United States, which in its scope will include many of the crimes and criminals who, under the present treaty, are beyond the reach of the law.

The Death List Increasing.

BEAUMONT, TEX., Oct. 17.—It is estimated by persons who have been over the scene of the disaster at Johnson's Bayou, Sabine Pass and Taylor's Bayou, that the death list will amount to two hundred and fifty. Eighty-five bodies have been recovered and buried at Johnson's Bayou, fifty-four at Sabine Pass and about seventy white and colored persons are still missing at Sabine Pass, alone. Hundreds of thousands of acres are still submerged, rendering the search for the dead very difficult. Over sixty people still remain to be accounted for at Johnson's Bayou. It is thought that many of the dead have been carried out to sea by the tide.

National Ordnance Factory.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—The work of transforming the Washington Navy-yard into a naval ordnance factory will be commenced in a few days. The old buildings will be taken down or reconstructed, and new ones, suitable to the new kind of industry, will be built. The Secretary of the Navy intends to place this new naval ordnance shop as speedily as possible in a condition of the most efficiency. It is expected that within sixty days 300 men will be employed in the shops, and that ultimately more than 3,000 will be at work there. Appropriations have already been made to establish the plant.

C., Oct. 17.—News has been received here that another earthquake fissure has been discovered near the manufacturing town of Pelser which is near the mountains, and which was thought to be out of the range of the disturbances. It is said to be several inches wide, and runs through a cotton field east and west.

THE STRIKE.

Packers and Employes Lock Horns on the Eight Hour Rule.

Nearly Seventeen Thousand Men Out—A Long and Bitter Struggle Evident.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—There is no prospect of an early settlement of the packers' strike. The packing house firms come to the relief of Armour by saying that they are as much responsible for the stand taken as he, and that they will stand together till the last. They claim that Armour has 1,[illegible] men employed and more arriving daily. Armour's beef packers were ordered out this morning. Delegate Barry, referring to the ordering out of these men, said: "We have formally declared war on the big pork speculator, and it will be war to the knife and knife to the hilt. I shall go to Richmond now before the convention adjourns, and you may depend upon it that Armour's meats throughout the United States will be an unknown quantity in less than three months. We intend to fight an aggressive battle, and Armour, with his millions, will either be brought to terms or relegated to the position of a retired, if not a bankrupt, pork packer. As far as the men are concerned, we shall take care of them. Besides, the closing down of the industry here does not necessarily do away with it altogether. The demand is bound to be met; if not here, elsewhere." During a conference this evening between Delegates Butler and Barry on the one side, and P. D. Armour and S. W. Allerton, two of the wealthiest packers, on the other, the suggestion that a long strike would result in great loss financially, and the loss of life, perhaps, beside, elicited from Armour the sentiment that loss of life cut no figure in the case; it was a question of right or wrong, and right was going to prevail at any cost. Nearly seventeen thousand men, in addition to those already out, refused to go to work this morning, in obedience to the order of the Executive Board of District Assembly No. 57, Knights of Labor, of which Delegate Butler is Master Workman. Almost every regularly employed workman in the house quit, and ten sheep butchers quit this morning. The beef and sheep butchers made great sacrifices in obeying, for they enjoyed good pay and eight hours, but not a man of them failed to go out. Swift & Morris, rivals of Armour, are thus enabled to eclipse the latter's beef trade, unless he can resume work at once with non-Union men—and this Armour is attempting to do. Pinkerton guards have been largely increased at the yards, and each prominent packer's residence is guarded to-night by two stalwart policemen, who refuse to allow even reporters to set foot on the premises.

THE CHECK RETURNED.

Editor Dana Refuses to Allow the Grants to Pay That Bill.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—Colonel Fred. Grant has written a letter to the editor of the Sun, saying that while the Grant family regards the bill of Holmes & Co., the undertakers, who embalmed the General's body as unjust, they did not wish to see others suffer by reason of it, and he therefore encloses Mrs. Grant's check for $500, the amount of Holmes & Co.'s bill. To this, Mr. Dana replies that as the Grant family regard the bill as improper, there is no reason why the Sun should be reimbursed for its payment of the same, and the check is therefore returned.

Torn to Pieces by Hogs.

MOUNT STERLING, ILL., Oct. 15.—Mrs. Greenwell, a widow, aged seventy years, left home on Tuesday afternoon between three and four o'clock to visit Mr. McWilliams, distant about three-quarters of a mile. She did not return on Tuesday night, but nothing strange was thought of that; but anxiety came when Wednesday morning did not bring her, and search was made, and after a time the bones and pieces of her bloody flesh were found surrounded by a drove of hogs, who were fighting over her remains, which were identified by scraps of clothing as those of Mrs. Greenwell. It is supposed that the old lady fainted, and that the hogs attacked her before she regained consciousness.

A WIDE-SPREAD STORM.

Further Details of the Disaster at Sabine Pass.

ORANGE, TEX., Oct. 14.—Details of the destruction by the storm at Sabine Pass and Johnson's Bayou come in slowly and are yet indefinite, though all agree that there has been a great loss of life and property. Two brothers named Pomeroy were picked up by the schooner Andrew Boden in Sabine Lake. They had been in the water thirty-six hours, clinging to their capsized yawl. Their mother and sister and Mrs. Captain Junker, her son and a little girl of the party were lost. The Pomeroys report that 30 lives were lost at the Porter house, where the people had collected as the last place of safety. It went to pieces at 6 o'clock. Many persons are missing. Still greater loss is reported from Johnson's Bayou. Whole families were swept away. Not a house was left standing within five miles of the lake. Parties were organized last night and left on the steamer Lamar and Emily P. with provisions and bedding.

LAKE CHARLES, LA., Oct. 14.—The loss of property along the Cameron Parish Gulf Coast, and for some distance west of Sabine Pass, by the storm of Tuesday night was fearful. The mail-boat from Cameron Parish reports that the water at Calcasieu Pass was eight feet deep at the light-house, and that the entire country east and west was submerged Tuesday night, drowning thousands of cattle and ruining crops. News from Pointe la Hache and points below shows that the first account of the damage was rather under than overestimated. There has been almost a total destruction of crops of all kinds from Pointe a la Hache to Fort Eads on the east side of the river. The schooner J. & J., lumber laden, was driven on the levee, thirty-five miles below the city, and left high and dry. Two unknown luggers shared the same fate. What oranges there were on the trees were torn off. The damage between Pointe a la Hache in rice gardens, cattle, horses, poultry, houses, etc., is estimated at $200,000. No loss of life is reported.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Reports of disasters from the storm are coming in. At Chicago trees and saplings were twisted off, and houses demolished. Twenty-nine houses at Buffalo, N. Y., were totally destroyed and a number of persons killed. The wires throughout Michigan are almost all down, caused by the storm. The storm was pretty general through Illinois, Indiana and portions of Kentucky and Ohio.

Necrology of Congress.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The death of Senator Pike makes the death roll of the Forty-ninth Congress eight in number already. Mr. Duncan, of Pennsylvania, who was a member of the Forty-eight Congress and re-elected to the Forty-ninth, died before the close of the Forty-eighth. Mr. Ellwood, of Illinois, died before the session of the Forty-ninth began. Rankin, of Wisconsin, came here dying, and was the third on the death roll. Congressman Hahn, of Louisiana, was next; then Mr. Cole, of Maryland; then Mr. Beach, of New York. In the Senate Senator Miller, of California, died during the session, and now Senator Pike. The number of deaths in this Congress is a good deal above the average rate of mortality in Congress.

His Innocence Established.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 14.—Ten years ago Charles Smith, treasurer of Kearney Township, near this city, was accused of robbing the township of $25,000. He claimed that he had refunded $25,000 worth of bonds, but the canceled securities had been stolen from his office. Proceedings were begun against him, but they were discontinued. Wednesday workmen discovered a strong box buried in the ground some distance from Mr. Smith's house. It was found to contain $30,000 of canceled bonds of Kearney Township. Smith's innocence is thus established.

The wind blew down trees and chimneys and tore off roofs. No lives were lost.

The dead man cut his wife's throat in July last at Atwood, Ill., and his avengers becoming weary of the law's tardiness, resorted to lynching to get Wildman out of the way.

Three Wives Testify Against Him.

KANKAKEE, ILL., Oct. 14.—Harry Goff, formerly of Chicago, was sentenced this morning to serve two years in the penitentiary for bigamy. Three wives with their children appeared against him on the trial.

CLEVELAND'S ADMINISTRATION

A General Review of It by Postmaster General Vilas in a Letter to His Wisconsin Constituents.

When President Cleveland took office a large number of our fellow citizens had been taught to expect little less than National calamity to follow Democratic ascendancy. Distrusting the pledges of the party to the people, and failing to comprehend its benign principles, many who believed the operations of government would prove a disastrous failure, the public service be imbecile, the finances illy managed, the revenues but half collected or half squandered, our pensioners go unpaid, our public lands be lost, our colored citizens relegated to servitude and all securities for business disappear. Weak and credulous, indeed, must be the man who longer yields faith to such dreadful prophecies. In the eighteen months which have passed not only the ordinary operations of the Government have proceeded without difficulty or disturbance, but already many pledges have found redemption. Vast quantities of the public lands which had fallen under private control have been reclaimed and saved for settlers, and measures of economy in collections of revenues and expenditures have yielded good results.

For a summary proof, contrast the business of the treasury during the two last fiscal years, of which the Acting Secretary, Mr. Fairchild, has kindly furnished me a statement. During the year ended June 30, 1885, the receipts were $323,690,706.38, and during the year ended June 30, 1886, $336,439,727.06, while the expenditures of the former period were $260,226,935.11, as against only $242,483,138.50 in the latter. Or roundly stated, more revenue was collected during the last than during the preceding years by $13,000,000, while the expenditures were decreased by $18,000,000, notwithstanding also the increase in payments for pensions was over $7,000,000. This brief statement is an exponent of the Administration of Grover Cleveland, and a volume of testimony at once that much was need and much has been done, faithfully; also has the President pressed the reformation of the civil service according to the repeated promises of the party. Many difficulties have crossed the way and many misconceptions taken place. The teaching of years that a civil officer must be a party laborer had rendered incumbents generally obnoxious to just complaint and marked them to the censure of opponents. Thus numerous changes were justly due, which, when made, have highly fired the zeal for reform in the breasts of our adversaries, and unavoidable delays have disturbed some friends, who recognized such changes to be demanded. Yet amidst all the steady purpose has maintained its way, and with patriotism and patience the party has maintained its President and its good faith, and the cause of good government made substantial progress.

Another result bright with promise to the Republic's future, is the complete fruition of the purposes of the great war in the restoration of harmony and good feeling between the sections of the country, a result which only could have come by the success of a national party, and a result which the great Captain of the Union bore his witness of with the declaration he had wished to see it ever since the war—a condition of genuine fraternity so nobly marked as to stir the profoundest emotion by the spectacle now presented of the survivors of the Grand Army with golden contributions striving to bind the wounds of desolate Charleston. By many testimonies, indeed, the security of the past is fixed, and the impulses of national ambition to win a great future are exhibited. The eye is bent hopefully forward now, and a wise guidance of the years before, not revenges for the past, is the care of the thoughtful citizen. The duty and opportunity of such leadership belong now to the Democratic party. Its principles are wisely adapted to the needs of the Republic and the prosperity of the people. If it shall meet the exigencies of the time, its restored power will be such as was its original possession from the day of Jefferson, with brief interruptions, for more than half a century. Nothing will more forward such accomplishment than temperate discussion among those who differ, and patient and manly persistence in the cultivation of harmonious feeling and action.

(Signed) WILLIAM F. VILAS.

MR. BENEDICT'S REFORMS.

The Public Printer Cutting Off Needless Expenses and Struggling to Remedy Republican Abuses.

The new Public Printer, on taking charge of his office, was confronted by the unpleasant fact that his predecessor, for the first two months of the present fiscal year, expended a sum which, if the same ratio should be kept up, would result in a deficiency of several hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Benedict says the office is so overcrowded that the employes are in each other's way, and the result is that, after a fortnight's examination of the business, he has found he could get along with a much smaller force. The meager remainder of the appropriation left him by Mr. Rounds compels him to be very circumspect with expenditures, and wholesale dismissals of employes are the consequence. He understands what is required of every head of a bureau under the present Administration, to bring every thing down to hard pan and business principles. The Government printing-office was very convenient for Congressmen to pay off some of their political debts to their constituents, and Mr. Rounds was too obliging to refuse their applications. The new Public Printer is of sterner stuff, a thorough business man, trained in an excellent school, and only intent upon fulfilling his duty to the letter, letting the results of his work speak for themselves. He appreciates the golden rule of the Democratic Administration, that an officer of the Government who has charge of a bureau holds the money of the people in his hands, to be used for their purposes, and to further their interests, and when any part of the funds which the taxpayers have entrusted to him are diverted to other purposes, or when, by design or neglect, he allows a sum to be applied to the salaries of unnecessary employes, merely to please some member of Congress, or some personal or political friends, he violates his duty.

In the printing office, as in all other departments of the Government, there is no different rule of fidelity, under the present regime, between the office-holder and the tax-payer than that which should regulate the conduct of the former when, as an individual he holds the money of his neighbor. Under the Republican Administration such a rule would be laughed at and it was only made respected under the present regime by the employment of stern measures. It took some time to convince Republican office-holders that the reform policy of President Cleveland was a genuine one and had come to stay. Those who refused to subscribe to it were compelled to walk the plank, and the spoils party raised a piteous howl at each manifestation of this golden principle of honest government. It was high time for a change in the management of the Government printing office. Had Mr. Rounds been permitted to go on his way squandering the appropriation, by the time Congress met there would have been no funds left and a demand would have been made for a large deficiency appropriation. Mr. Benedict, handicapped though he is by his predecessor's extravagance, has applied himself earnestly to devise means of husbanding the slender resources at his command and to make them suffice until the end of the fiscal year. He will be obliged to make further reductions of the force before he can see his way clear. The Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Republican thus explains the situation: "Mr. Rounds crammed the office as full of Republican partisans as it was possible for him to do, and he used as much of the appropriation as the law would allow. Indeed, it is charged that he stretched the law as far as it would stretch and got all the good out of the office for the grand old party that he could get. Rounds is a sharp one, and he has left the office in a shape to give Benedict a great deal of trouble.—Albany Argus.

DRIFT OF THE PRESS.

—Mr. Blaine would probably do well to suppress his friend Caldwell, who is being interviewed by the Eastern papers about the plumed person's prospects, intentions, and so on. The name is fragrant with recollections of Mulligan letters and Little Rock and Fort Smith matters, and already the question is asked if it is not the same Caldwell that figured during the Mulligan-letter period.—Chicago Times.

—In Congress and the Legislature the most stubborn battles have been fought by the Democrats in behalf of the rights of labor and the curtailment of the power and insolence of monopolies. The neglect and indifference of the Republican Senate during the past session of Congress formed a striking contrast to the zeal of the Democratic House on labor questions. The most valuable work in the same cause during the session of the Legislature was done by Democrats.—Albany Argus.

—Yes, the Republicans do love the working-men and the labor organizations. Their affection for them is deep, tender and touching. The Tribune reveals the hollowness of its pretended regard for the labor organizations when it says editorially: "The candidacy of Henry George for the New York mayoralty will not have been wholly in vain if it shall have what now seems a probable result. That probability, of course, is the election of the Republican ticket.—Detroit Free Press.

—There must be a scarcity of ordinary timber when the Republicans of Cincinnati are compelled to renominate vulgar and indecent Ben Butterworth for Congress. It is not long ago that this low-down politician delivered such a disgraceful speech in the House of Representatives that the women in the gallery left it hurriedly to escape his vile words. The decent people of Cincinnati ought to combine against Butterworth and bury him under such an adverse vote that he would never be heard again.—Buffalo Times.

—Senator Logan accuses the Democratic party in power of extravagance. In one respect, we admit, it has been a little extravagant—or rather more liberal in expenditure than its Republican predecessors. During the fiscal year ended June 30—the first year of a Democratic Administration—it paid out in one single class of expenditures $7,000,000 more than was paid out the previous year. It was for pensions to disabled soldiers and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers. But if Logan thinks that expense unjustifiable he ought to take into account that the Administration saved more than enough in other items to make it up. The net saving, in fact, after paying the increase of pensions, was nearly $18,000,000.—Detroit Free Press.

—General Logan must have entertained a very uncomplimentary opinion of the intelligence of his hearers when he told them that "the percentage of loss during the Republican Administration will defy comparison with the history of any government on earth." He utterly ignores the operations of the land office thieves, the Star route and mail subsidies, the navy frauds under "Secor" Robeson and "Bill" Chandler, the Pacific railroad swindles, the hundred other rings of jobbery, subsidy, contract and monopoly which fattened and throve under the Republican Administration at the expense of the tax-payers. Those rings grew in strength and insolence on the favors of the Republican party, and in return for the favors they received they gave liberally to perpetuate the power of that party.—Albany Argus.

Very Monotonous.

Having been deprived of the more serious business of carrying on the National Government, the Republican party now devotes a good deal of its leisure time to drafting resolutions. Those who have met with reverses are much given to telling what they did in the days of their prosperity, and what they would like to do for the benefit of the human race if they had the means. It doubtless soothed the feelings of the Ancient Mariner to pour his tale into the unwilling ears of the wedding guest. Grief is apt to be voluble. The Republican resolutions of those days are very long and very dreary. There is a sameness about them that suggests their emanation from a single source. Probably skeleton plans of platforms have been prepared, under the direct supervision of the master carpenter at Augusta, for the use of State and district conventions. They all begin, it will be observed, by "pointing with pride" to what the party did "in the wah," about a quarter of a century ago, when it was young and virtuous. Concerning its record during the last fifteen years they are naturally reticent. But of what the party would do if it only had another chance, many words are necessary to tell. And the letters of Junius, and other literature of invective, are heavily drawn upon to describe the Democratic sins of omission and commission.—Boston Post.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Burley leaf has advanced on the statistical merits, and a healthy manufacturing demand about $1 [illegible], and high grades are selling at $1 [illegible] higher than a month ago. Low grades are also somewhat better. Dark and heavy tobaccos are without noticeable price changes in any grades, but the medium category, which includes most Regie tobaccos, have been going at fuller prices. The stock of dark tobacco in sight in America and Europe has increased about 40,000 hhds in twelve months, though the additions of very desirable and saleable leaf have been moderate. The present crop, notwithstanding the frost will contribute a larger quantity of sound leaf and generally superior dark tobacco than has been drawn from any crop in five years. The curing contingency is still before the crop in large measure, and in the main the weather has been favorable. We quote 1885 tobaccos as follows for full weight packages:

AT Louisa, Bella Leavisy and Lillia Botts, colored, quarreled, when the former whipped out a revolver and shot the latter in the abdomen, inflicting a mortal wound. Leavisy was jailed.

THE trial of Shade Chapman for the murder of Dave James, in Martin County, in 1884, closed at Inez the other day, the jury sentencing Chapman to the penitentiary for life. He has been conveyed to Frankfort.

A HARD wind-storm prevailed throughout the State the other morning, but no special damage is reported. The wind started a freight car from a siding near the old depot, Louisville. It ran onto the main track and was run into by a south-bound Louisville and Nashville freight, causing a wreck. Two unknown tramps stealing a ride on the cowcatcher were killed.

MISS LULU SMITH, a young lady who had been engaged in teaching school in Meade County, drowned herself in a pond. No cause is assigned for the act.

CHAS. RAMSEY was convicted at Maysville of shooting and wounding Wm. Bennett, and given one year in the penitentiary.

THE roof of the Christian Church at Danville was blown off by high wind, the other morning, and carried 75 yards from the building.

PROHIBITION was adopted in Simpson County, the other day, by a majority of 300 votes.

IN the United States Court, in Louisville, Robert E. Lee, of Knox County, was acquitted of the charge of "moonshining," the principal witness against him being Stonewall Jackson.

JASPER V. YATES and Maud S. Ward, an eloping couple from Upton, crossed the river a few days ago, and were married in Jeffersonville, Ind. The bride's parents objected to young Jasper and forbid his attentions to their daughter. The young couple decided to elope, and the young men drove up in front of his sweetheart's residence in a huckster's wagon, in the rear of which was a large chicken-coop. While Jasper proceeded to interview the old gentleman with a view to securing the daughter's hand in marriage, the latter slipped out to the wagon and climbed into the chicken-coop. When the old man refused, the young lover said: "All right, I didn't want her, anyhow," and drove away. In a short while the girl's absence was discovered, and an exciting chase took place, in which the whole neighborhood took part. Pistol balls whistled through the covered huckster's wagon, but only had the effect to accelerate the speed of the foam-covered steeds. Reaching the depot at Nolan, the train coming in, they abandoned the wagon and fagged-out horses and boarded the cars. The pursuers reached the platform just as the train got under headway, but the expectant groom explained matters to the conductor, and no amount of signals had the effect of stopping the train.

HUGH EDWARDS, Jeff Jerrett and Bud Crontcher are in the Mt. Vernon jail charged with the murder of Elias Searcy. The theory of the prosecution is that Searcy, having first been made drunk, was poisoned for the purpose of securing thirty dollars which he had upon his person.

THE Kentucky Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars completed its work a few days ago, and adjourned to meet in Louisville on the second Tuesday in October, 1887. R. S. Easton, of Spottsville, was elected and installed, a Grand Chief Templar and Alex. Lusk, of Gum Sulphur, Grand Counselor.

AT Eminence, the case of the Commonwealth against Harry Scott, colored, who blistered his two-year-old child with fire and then lashed it to death with a whip, has been tried. The jury returned a verdict of guilty and ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

BUCKNER & WOLDRIDGE, proprietors of one of the largest tobacco houses in South Kentucky, made a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors the other day. The failure is a rather bad one, the nominal assets not reaching the liabilities by more than one third.

THE juries in the Henry Circuit Court, sitting at New Castle a few days ago, had a good deal of fun with the boys who went from Louisville to that county last March to witness the Warren-Barnes prize-fight. The fun was ladled out to them at from $20 to $60 each, with added trimmings in the shape of costs.

J. A. HOFFMAN and Charles Wortham, jr., have been appointed storekeepers in the Second district.

COLONEL JAMES M. DUNCAN, of Louisville, has been appointed to a position in the folding department of the House of Representatives.

JOHN W. DENHAM, of Pulaski County, has been appointed storekeeper-gauger in the Eighth district.

THE other day John Cramer, a farm hand employed by Frank Meyers, nine miles south of Louisville, went into the pasture to salt the cattle. Unfortunately he wore a red shirt. A bull saw him and made a rush. Cramer tried to get over a fence, but was too late. The enraged bull gored him through the heart and bowels and stamped him into a shapeless mass. He was found dead two hours later with the bull standing guard over him.

JESSIE BLACKFORD shot Anderson Clayburn at Keene. He was jailed at Nicholasville.

THE tops of the old brick piers used in holding up the cables on the old suspension bridge across the Licking between Newport and Covington were being torn down a few days ago, to give place for the foot passenger ways on the new iron truss bridge, now approaching completion. The mortar and cement had become so hard that it was impossible to remove the bricks with a chisel, and dynamite had to be used.

AL FOX, while drunk and on the railroad track, was run over and killed by a passenger train near Mannington. His head was crushed to a jelly.

UNDER the head "Silver's Latest Triumph," the N. Y. Mercury says: "The new issue of silver certificates in small denominations will be a boon to the masses. Of course Wall street knows better than this, but it is its cue to growl when the people have a chance to better themselves. The grumblers know that France has a currency five times as large proportionately as ours, and yet it is the most prosperous country in Europe; and they know also that the silver currency represents actual silver dollars in Treasury, while the bank notes represents a reserve of less than thirty per cent. for their redemption. Let the inflation go on. The sixty million people in this country need it."

THE great Glenview stock farm, comprising 639 acres, situated near Louisville, was sold at public auction on Tuesday of last week, to J. I. Case, the threshing machine man at $113 50 per acre. Mr. Case is the owner of the celebrated horses Phallas and Jay-Eye-See, and has a large stock farm near Racine. He expects to winter all his stock on his new purchase. After the farm was sold the horses were put up and forty-one head of trotters were sold, aggregating $723,515, averaging $3,015 per head. The two great stallions and the head of the stud, Nutwood and Pancoast, brought $50,000, the first named selling for $28,000 and the latter for $22,000. John Shults of Brooklyn, New York, was the purchaser of Pancoast and Frank D. Stouf, of Dubuque, Iowa, of Nutwood. It was the largest sale that has taken place in Kentucky for a long time, over twelve hundred prominent horse buyers being present. Most of the horses sold go out of the State.

NEXT Saturday the Teachers' Association of this county will meet in Morgan Academy. An effort is being made to make it a most interesting and profitable meeting, surpassing, in that particular, any of its meetings yet held. Among the distinguished educators invited to be present are Profs. George A. Yates, of Covington, and Hutchinson, of Grant county. The teachers of this county should turn out en masse and devote the day to an interchange of ideas regarding the subject of education. The position of teacher is one of very great importance, and the person aspiring to that high calling should be diligent in his or her efforts to acquire all the information possible which is calculated to be conducive of success in the chosen field. The business of teaching, like any other, is progressive, and the frequent conventions of those engaged in it are beneficial in keeping them informed as to the new modes of instruction as they are introduced, besides it cultivates a social feeling among the teachers, and causes them to recognize that they are laborers in a common cause.

THE New York Mail and Express says: "The best index of the progress made in breeding the fast trotters is the table that is published each season showing the reduction made in time from year to year. No single State in America has made more progress in the production of fast trotters during the last thirty years than Kentucky has. Up to August 1, 1886, there are 161 horses who have trotted in 2:20 or better. Of this number Kentucky has furnished fifty-nine, and the rest of the country 102, showing a large proportion for a single State. Of the 161 trotters in 2:20 or better, only 13 have trotted in 2:15 or better:

Maud S.	2:08¾
Jay Eye-See	2:10
St. Julian	2:11¼
Rorus	2:13¼
Maxy Cobb	2:13¼

Clingstone	2:14
Trinket	2:14
Harry Wilks	2:14½
Hopeful	2:14¾
Lulu	2:15
Majollca	2:15

Of these thirteen, six were bred in Kentucky—Maud S., Jay-Eye-See, Phallas, Trinket, Harry Wilkes and Lulu, nearly one-half, among whom are the king and queen of the trotting turf.

A TERRIBLE AFFLICTION.

Valuable Information Relating to Chills and Fever, Alias Dumb Ague, Alias Malaria, Alias the Shakes.

Recently a number of our pretty philosophers have been giving their views on the subject of malaria. Some men are born with malaria, some achieve malaria and others have malaria thrust upon them.

In looking back over my bitter past I find that once I had malaria myself. It was in 1865 and lasted seven weeks. But it was not called malaria in those primitive days of this now fashionable malady. It was known in its various forms as chills-and-fever and dumb ague, while vulgar people simply summed them both up as "the shakes."

Dumb ague would come on every day, chills-and-fever every other day. Of the two perhaps dumb ague was considered the more distressing. I knew an old lady at this time who had the dumb ague so badly that she could do nothing but talk.

But to myself. I had a terrible time. I wore all my flesh off; or, to be more correct, the chills worked all my flesh off for me until I was nothing but bones, like a shad.

I have never since been so much reduced in circumstances as I was then reduced in flesh.

The one fortunate thing about my chills was that the preliminary heads [illegible] would set in about school time in the morning. Then I would go forth and sit in the sun, and keep as warm as I could. Notwithstanding the fact that I was cold, the thing I yearned for most was ice-water.

But at this period I was not the bondholder I am at present, and ice was far beyond my pecuniary reach.

I took quinine until my head rattled like a bob-tail car on a down-grade. The old lady with the dumb ague took [illegible] some noxious drug until she completely ruined her artificial teeth. But, as I had no artificial teeth to ruin, I went on taking it until I felt sure that that was not the medicine for me.

"What cures one won't cure another of agey," was a stock quotation among the yokels that surrounded me. Every man, woman and child swore by the compound that cured him, her, he, she or it. One man was cured by quinine, another by chalk and vinegar, and another by chinoidine.

At that time I was a constant reader of dime novels, and fervently believed in Indians and every thing Indian, from Indian padling to Indianapolis.

So when I was recomended to try a famous patent medicine known as Indian Polliwog, I proceeded straightway to the drug store and got a bottle, and went into ecstasies of joy over the label, which showed an Indian, in war-paint and feathers, standing under a cottonwood tree, leaning on the muzzle of a rifle (evidently unloaded) in a majestic attitude, with the last rays of the setting sun playing fantastic capers on his fur-lined circular. This gave me great faith in the medicine, which was said to be composed entirely of herbs.

But after I used the contents of the bottle, I concluded that if there is any thing of an Indian nature that will break up malaria, it is a tomahawk buried about half a-foot in the skull.

But on my well days I made up for what I suffered on the sick ones. I would go fishing and shooting and swimming, and get so tired out that I hoped to be able to sleep through the next day, chills and all. People who were literally roasting, for it was midsummer, used to regard me with envy when they saw me shivering and shaking in an overcoat.

When asked if I would go to a picnic or a base-ball match on a certain day, I used to count the days off on my fingers to know whether I was going to be sick or well at the time, and answer accordingly. The happiness and misery of the sick and well days was a sharp contrast. I called it sunshine and shadow, just as I call my present days sunshine and shad-roe.

Some people said it was not malaria at all, but that my liver was out of order. I then commenced eating bacon three times a day to brace up my liver.

I never knew exactly how I got rid of it. It seemed that it got tired of me and departed. I fancied in my joy that I had perhaps mislaid it somewhere, just as a hen sometimes mislays an egg.

Anyhow, my chills mysteriously vanished, and I trust that if they are ever found the finder may be some other than myself.—R. K. Munkittrick, in Puck.

Indian Sport In Nevada.

Duck lake, in Nevada, lies on the north side of the Pyramid branch of the Truckee river and west of the upper portion of Pyramid lake, from which it is only separated by a low hill or ridge of sand. It is circular in form and has neither inlet nor outlet. This small lake is a great resort for ducks, geese, swans and other water fowl when there is a heavy wind and Pyramid lake is made to boil like a pot. They then flock to this less boisterous sheet of water by tens of thousands. On such occasions the Indians prepare for a grand duck drive. All who have guns and many who are armed only with bows and arrows form in a line on the crest of the sand ridge between the two lakes. A number of Indians then man a fleet of rafts, and starting from the western shore of the small lake drive the ducks and other fowl from their resting place. The birds start for Pyramid lake again, and as they fly across the dividing ridge the men and boys there lying in wait bring down hundreds of them with guns and other weapons. Even small boys, lying on their backs with their bows on their feet, pull their arrows with both hands, sending the missiles with great force and killing birds in large numbers.—Chicago News.

"Now, I want to ask, for the information of all present, whether there is any mess of darkness at night?" "Well, Mr. H[illegible], mythologically speaking, there is not. Categorically speaking, the night is full of mews."—N. Y. Independent.

"Won't you go up, dear, and get my goats off the bureau?" "Your goats?" queried Jones, "what new-fangled thing's that?" "I'll show you," retorted the wife, and she sailed upstairs and down again with a pair of kids on her hands. "There they are," said she. "Why, I call those kids," said the surprised husband. "So do you?" replied the wife. "So did I once, but they are so old now I'm ashamed to call them any thing but goats." Jones took the hint.—Chicago Journal.

Postmaster Facemire received a letter from the Coroner of Jefferson Co., Thursday, notifying him that the body of Charles Gordon, of Rising Sun, was found in the Ohio River at Madison, Wednesday morning. From the letter it seems that he had been in the water about six days. He had been teaching school near Big Bone Springs, Ky., and it was his custom to come home every Friday evening. Failing to come home Friday evening of last week, his parents supposed he had concluded to remain in Kentucky over Sunday. Now, however, it is their impression that he started from East Bend for this place in a skiff, and was accidently drowned.—Local.

The Teachers' Association will meet [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] take part in the exercises.

It is to be hoped that the teachers of this Association [illegible] all of [illegible] meetings [illegible] be benefited and instructive to all who attend, and the teachers of the county should make it a part of their school duties, to take active membership with the association, and help to [illegible] that is sure to result in good.

The time for "Rip Van Winkle" school teaching is past and we need live, energetic teachers, who keep abreast of the times, by equipping themselves with the best ideas and methods of properly conducting a school.

How is this great subject to be attained? Not by quietly remaining in your own little sphere and awaiting new thoughts and new ideas to suggest themselves. But by arousing yourself to action; by visiting, and participating in the meetings instituted by your fellow teachers, carefully noting the suggestions made, exchanging ideas with them, and thus advancing education on a higher basis than it has with us to-day.

School teaching is a higher, a nobler calling than a trivial money compensation; for, there are entrusted to the teachers care of young minds that are to be molded into perfect man and womanhood, and with this great responsibility before them what teacher can content himself in his dormant state, as it were, or where such opportunities for improvement presents themselves? A better institution was never formed than the Teachers' Association for the teacher, and the careful, diligent and faithful teachers who decide that they will not let an opportunity pass by unimproved will find in the end that their labor has not been in vain. Fathers and mothers will admire them as a criterion. Pupils will love and respect them as their instructor, and they will have the consolation of knowing that with their money compensation they will be considered the desired and trusty teacher.

Let the teachers of Boone county resolve to be more efficient in their school work, than they have ever been before, and with the resolution, the cause of education will be advanced.

A PESTERED LITTLE MAID.

Was ever a maid so pestered, dear me, what shall I do?
I thought there was none like Robin, and loved him leal and true;
I thought there was none like Robin, but now that Jamie's here
I look at Robin and Jamie and both of them are dear;
And whether the old or new love wins, I canna tell as yet;
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see which way my heart shall set!

Was ever a maid so worried! I would na do a wrong;
But there is Robin and Jamie—I canna to both belong.
Yet when a-walking with Robin I think him the dearest lad,
And when Jamie comes a-wooing I canna [illegible] him [illegible] bad;
And whether the old or new love wins, I canna tell as yet;
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see which way my heart shall set!

Was ever a maid so beset about? I dinna, canna see,
How that Robin and Jamie can both belong to me.
For Robin's like the sunshine with eyes of sunny light,
And Jamie's like the darkness with eyes of dusky night;
Yet whether the old or new love wins, I canna tell as yet;
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see which way my heart shall set!

Was ever a maid so badgered! Whichever way I turn,
Whether to Robin or Jamie, the truth I canna learn;
A many a thing in Robin helps me to hold him near,
And a many a thing in Jamie makes him as passing dear;
And betwixt the old and new love my heart is sore [illegible];
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see, I will na wed as yet!

A LEOPARD HUNT.

A Thrilling Story of the Indian Jungles.

It was my good fortune, a great many years ago, to be cantoned at Julbarri. I say "good fortune," for so I considered it; but I am afraid, if you had asked at our mess for votes as to whether I ought to qualify the word fortune with the adjective "good" or "bad," I should have got very few to vote for my word. Good fortune I considered it, nevertheless; for I was an ardent sportsman; Julbarri was almost untried ground; and the neighboring jungles abounded in game of many kinds, among which the rhinoceros, the tiger and the leopard were by no means few and far between. And yet I can not deny that for any one who was not a sportsman, Julbarri was about as slow a station as could be picked out in all the length and breadth of our vast Indian empire. It was situated in an out-of-the-way corner of Bengal; and there was no large station within a couple of hundred miles of us where a man with social and gregarious tastes could go for a few days to get rid of the oft-told tales and well thrashed-out politics of the limited circle of our small mess-table. Julbarri was, alas, a single-corps station, and except a civil officer or two the whole society consisted of the gallant British officers of the distinguished Seventy-sixth native infantry; a nice set of fellows enough, I allow; but still the best of listeners must in time grow inattentive to Smith's ideas on the comparative merits of Arab and English horses; and it is difficult to wage any real warfare with Jones as he challenges you for the hundreth time to defend Lord Gough's tactics at Chillianwalla.

At the time of which I write our society was at a peculiarly low ebb. The drill season was over, the hot weather was coming on and the leave season had begun. There was so little work to be done that our Colonel had taken pity on our isolation, and had been unusually, perhaps almost unauthorizedly, liberal in the matter of leave; and our mess, small enough at its best, had dwindled and dwindled, until now not more than half-a-dozen unfortunates daily stretched their legs beneath its well-spread mahogany. For me, the approaching heat had no terrors, the smallness of our society no ennui, and the prospect of escape from Julbarri no charms: for the beginning of the hot weather is the very time when the best shooting can be obtained, and I had long been watching the drying up of the grass in the jungles, and had been looking forward to the time when we might start a tiger with some chance of bagging him. There was one thing in which we were particularly fortunate; we had attached to our regiment nine elephants as a part of our regimental transport. I need scarcely say that it was not long before we had the elephants and their mahouts (drivers) thoroughly trained for shooting. The largest elephants we trained to carry our howdahs, and the smaller we used to form a line to beat the jungles and drive out the game. With these elephants we had lots of fun, and there were few weeks after the shooting season began in which some of us did not go out two or three times. We generally took it in turns; four of us went out, and two remained behind to look after the regiment and the station.

We kept three or four shikarees (native hunters), who were constantly going about the villages and jungles within a radius of six or seven miles of cantonments; and as soon as they heard of a tiger having killed a bullock or any other animal, or as soon as they discovered the fresh footmarks of any animal worth going after, they would come in and give the khubber (news); and then those whose turn it was would send the elephants and their arms on towards where the game had been seen, and would follow themselves on horseback as quickly as possible. The best kind of khubber was when a bullock or any other large animal had been killed. The tiger usually prowls around some village or some place where cattle is pastured and kept for the night; and when he sees his opportunity, will spring on some unfortunate animal which has got separated from the rest of the herd, or has remained out too late in the jungle, heedless of the herdsman's call home, will kill it with a blow of his paw, and drag it into some neighboring jungle thicker and denser than that immediately around the village.

Nothing shows more the marvelous strength possessed by the tiger than the way in which he carries his victim away. I remember the first time I was shown where a tiger had dragged a full-grown bullock. I could not believe it possible; and it was not until after we had killed the robber—only an ordinary-sized tigress—and I had carefully gone over on foot the ground where she had dragged her prey, that I found that she had not only dragged the dead bullock—an animal, I should think, considerably beyond her own weight—over very rough ground and through a dense cane-brake, but that in some places, as the marks showed, she must actually have lifted the forequarters of the bullock off the ground in her mouth, and have walked several yards with it in that position. When the victim has been dragged to what the tiger considers a position of security it will sit down and make a good meal, and then retire a short distance [illegible] to some particularly thick [illegible], and there remain [illegible] night, and then return. In consequence of this well-known habit "a kill," as it is called in the best of all khubber, and in such cases if the tiger has not been disturbed, the sportsman is almost sure to find him lying somewhere close to the carcass, and if his arrangements are well made is pretty sure to get a shot at him.

Our shikarees, stimulated by liberal backsheesh when their news resulted in a bag, used often to bring us in khubber, but sometimes the news was not very good, and when this was the case, the less ardent sportsmen of our number would frequently refuse to go out, and would make over their turn to me. I never refused, for I was young and enthusiastic enough to love the fun and the excitement of the hunt, even when our expedition resulted in no bag, and did not care for the chaff with which my sedater comrades would greet me on my return. Sometimes, however, the laugh was on my side, but I was wise enough, with a view to future contingencies, not to indulge in it too much.

We had been having very fair sport on and off for about six weeks, and the animals in the jungles close around the station seemed to have been all killed off or driven away, for a whole week passed and no khubber good enough to tempt even me did our shikarees bring. It was the seventh blank day, and as we sat at our chota hazri (early morning cup of some invigorating but harmless beverage), under the shade of a splendid mango-tree which grew conveniently close to our mess-house veranda, my chum and I were discussing the necessity of taking a week's trip across the river which skirted our station, and were trying to cajole our companions into letting us have the use of the elephants for so long a time. We had nearly succeeded in persuading them of the uselessness of expecting to get any more shooting close to Julbarri, and two of the least enthusiastic of our Nimrods had actually given in, when into the compound and right up to our table who should dash but Jamala, the very best and most trustworthy of all our shikarees! Almost breathless, he stammered out: "Sahib, sahib, two such huge tigers! Their pugs are as big as that;" and he described with the end of the stick he held in his hand a figure in the dust, intended to portray the size of their footprints, which would have done credit to a well-grown mammoth. "They have killed a bullock in the Kala jungle, only six miles off; and I am sure they were still there when I left half an hour ago. I ordered the elephants to be got ready as I passed the lines."

Here was news with a vengeance; but alas, it was my turn to stay in cantonments; and with such splendid khubber as this I could not, of course, even hint the suggestion of an exchange. It was the custom of those going out, to borrow all the firearms of those remaining behind; so I and Castleton, who was my comrade in misfortune, made over our Joe Manton guns and our Purdeys to our luckier companions, and wished them good-speed with the best grace we could muster; and if we betrayed our feelings a little by throwing after them the parting exhortation: "Mind you don't miss the fifteen-footer;" well, I really think we ought to be forgiven.

Castleton was a married man; and I must crave the ladies' pardon for omitting in my list of our Julbarri residents the really charming Mrs. Castleton and her fascinating sister, Miss Jervoise. As soon as the hunters had gone, Castleton turned to me, and said: "You had better come over and lunch with us, Watson. You'll only be breaking your heart over visions of those two fabulously footed tigers, if you lunch at mess alone."

I thanked him; and two o'clock found me receiving the commiserations of the two fair ladies, while they pressed upon me the usual profuse hospitality of an Indian luncheon. We had reached the dessert stage, and Mrs. Castleton was just pressing me to taste some specially delicious plantains which a neighboring rajah had sent her the day before, when the bearer came in, and, making a salaam, said to Castleton: "A man has just come from that little hamlet of Goree; he wants the sahib log to go out and shoot a leopard which has just killed one of his kids, and is now lying eating it in a small patch of jungle. Goree is only a mile and a half from here."

We stared blankly at each other.

"What can we do?" said Castleton.

"Do? Why, go and shoot it, of course!" exclaimed the enthusiastic Miss Jervoise.

"But, Kate dear," broke in Mrs. Castleton with wifely solicitude, "the elephants are all away, and how can they shoot it?"

"Oh, I am not thinking about the elephants," replied Castleton; "but Watson and I have lent all our rifles and guns, and we haven't a single thing of any kind left."

"There are the sepoys' rifles," I suggested. "We could take one of them apiece; and, you know, we can't let the leopard get off without having a try for him. Can we?"

"Yes, there are the sepoys' rifles, certainly," replied Castleton rather doubtfully; "but"——

"And I have got a couple of spears," I interrupted. "Oh, do let us go at once, before he is disturbed."

"Well—all right; we'll try it," said Castleton, hesitatingly.

I lost no time in running home and changing into a shooting costume. Castleton sent his orderly off to the lines for our weapons; and by the time I had returned with the spears, the orderly reappeared with a couple of rifles and a packet of cartridges. So a very short time saw us mounted on our horses and following our guide out to the little village of Goree.

"I am not very sure about the wisdom of this business," said Castleton.

"Oh, it will be all right," I replied. "We must be careful not to fire until we are pretty sure to kill—that's all."

"H'm, yes, I suppose so," assented my comrade somewhat doubtfully.

As a matter of fact, it was not an overwise business. Our regiment was armed in those days with the short two-grooved Brunswick rifle, a muzzle loader, of course, and one in which the bullet had to be hammered into the muzzle with a small wooden hammer carried for the purpose, before it could be rammed down with the ramrod. This rendered the process of loading so dreadfully slow that practically it would make it quite impossible for either of us to get more than one shot, and it is no easy matter to kill a leopard with one bullet, however well placed. If he were not killed, he would be pretty certain to charge, and we should be in an awkward plight.

Matters did not look much more encouraging when we reached Goree. The khubber was good enough; there was the place where the kid had been struck, and there were the drops of blood and footprints of a large leopard leading into a patch of dense cane-jungle about one hundred yards long and sixty yards wide, and we had very little doubt that he was in there, sure enough. We arranged, somewhat rashly, that we would enter the jungle from nearly opposite ends of the patch and work towards the center. If either of us saw the leopard, we were, if possible, first to whistle and then to call out before shooting. We did this with a double object—first, that we might not shoot each other; and secondly, that if one of us wounded the beast and he came towards the other, we might be on the lookout for him, and not be taken unawares. So we separated; and I cautiously entered the left end of the patch, while Castleton made his entrance on the right. My end of the jungle was thicker than Castleton's, but the edge was fairly clear, and by peering under the brake, I could see four or five yards in front of me. Very soon, the cane and bushes became so dense that I had to clear away the leaves with one hand while I held the rifle ready cocked in the other. We had each a Sepoy accompanying us and carrying our second weapon, the spear. To my man I gave instructions that the moment I fired, I would hand him back the rifle, and he was to give me the spear. Of course I kept him behind me, so that he should be in no danger. We had not begun our advance more than two or three minutes, and had not penetrated, at our slow and cautious pace, more than about twenty yards, when Castleton whistled. I at once stood still. After a slight pause, he called out in a sort of stage whisper: "I see him, but it's a nasty shot. I can only see his hind quarters, and there is a lot of jungle in the way. Shall I shoot?"

"Fire away," I replied, in an equally melodramatic tone, heartily wishing that his chance had been mine. In about half a minute the report of Castleton's rifle rang out. It was followed by an angry roar somewhere from my right front, and there was a dead silence. The smoke from Castleton's rifle came floating over my head; but though I listened intently with my rifle half raised to my shoulder, not the sound of a footstep or the cracking of a twig could I hear. At last Castleton called out. "I've hit him, but not badly, I think; and he has gone off in your direction."

Giving Castleton time to reload, I again began moving forward with even greater caution than before. I had advanced only a few paces, when on pushing aside a screen of leaves thicker than usual, and thrusting my head into a bush, I met a sight that made my heart jump; there, within about six feet of me, crouched the leopard, his eyeballs glowing like balls of green fire in the dark jungle, a look of the most savage mischief on his face, and evidently just on the point of springing straight at me. My first impulse was to throw my rifle to my shoulder and fire at once; but more quickly than a flash of lightning came the conviction, like a living voice speaking in me: "If you do, and if you don't kill him, he'll kill you." My nerves seemed to grow steady at once, and I checked my first rash impulse. Then keeping my eye fixed on his, I raised my rifle slowly and deliberately, took a steady aim and fired. A dull groan and a desperate convulsion followed, and then in half a minute all was still. My faithful sepoy had duly obeyed my instructions; he had taken my rifle and had given me the spear, and with this spear held at the charge, ready to receive the leopard if he came my way, we waited until the convulsion subsided. Then peering in again, we found that the leopard had gone back; and it was not until we had advanced some ten yards that we came upon him lying dead. It shows the marvelous vitality of the feline race; for though the ball was a heavy one, and had crashed right through the brain, yet he had managed to go fully eight yards from where he was crouching. Had the ball been turned aside at all by a twig, or had it glanced off his skull, he would almost certainly have made his spring, and in a jungle so dense I could hardly have hoped to keep him off or defend myself.

I called up Castleton at once, and we soon pulled the leopard out of the thicket. We found that Castleton's bullet had hit him in the side, but far back, so as not to interfere in any way with his powers of attack. I congratulated myself on a lucky escape. The villagers were delighted at the death of a robber which had more than once laid their flocks under contribution, and pressed their services on us to carry him home. A procession was soon formed, and we returned to Julbarri in triumph with the leopard swung on a pole in front of us. The other hunters had not returned; so we had ample time to exhibit our prize to the sympathetic eyes of Mrs. Castleton and Miss Jervoise. In about an hour, the others returned, wearied and disgusted. The tigers had been disturbed before their arrival, and betaken themselves to some very heavy jungle, whence, in spite of their best efforts, they were unable to dislodge them. It required a lot of good feeling on their part to make them congratulate us as heartily as they did; and I hope our sympathy with their ill-luck showed itself quite untinged with any sense of our own better fortune.—Chambers' Journal.

VICTORIES OF PEACE.

Incomputable Cost of Revolutions in the Spanish-American Republics.

How costly and demoralizing to the industries of a country are civil commotions is clearly shown in the recent message of President Terra to the Uruguayan Congress. In order to cover the deficit caused by the recent revolution the Government is forced to issue an internal loan for $2,000,000, and largely to increase customs tariff. The annual revenue of the Republic is about $12,000,000, and there is an existing debt of some $60,000,000, so that the deficit noted is a serious matter for the Government. The increase of customs duties must diminish importation, and so there is likely to be a reduction in the total customs receipts, or at least no perceptible augmentation. What the cost of revolutions has been to the Spanish-American Republics of this hemisphere it would be difficult to compute. If we take into consideration not merely the pecuniary expenditure—the smallest part in fact—but the loss through the retarding of material development, it will be seen that thousands of millions of dollars will barely express the fact. Peace, such as Mexico is now enjoying, and has enjoyed for a long term of years, is of inestimable value. Under the influence of this profound peace not less than $150,000,000 in foreign capital has been invested here (a high authority says ($200,000,000), not a single dollar of which would have been placed in this country had civil strife been prevalent. The national wealth is to-day increasing at a rate little suspected by those who are unaware of the improvements being introduced on the haciendas by enterprising proprietors and in mining operations by their managers. We regard the present condition of affairs in this country as highly encouraging, and also as gratifying from the standpoint of the most exacting patriotism. Ten years more of profound internal peace and Mexico will have increased its aggregate wealth by at least a billion of dollars. If, in the meantime, immigration is encouraged, the country will have so grown in physical strength as to be in a much better condition to resist foreign aggression. When the passions and irritations of the moment shall have passed away, it will be clearly discerned by all thoughtful minds that the country has every thing to gain by maintaining public order. After the civil commotion of nearly seventy years, the Nation demands a period of repose, a chance to take breath and pursue the arts of peace. War hath its victories, but those of peace endure. With material welfare will come national strength and dignity. Mexico must be aided by the combined efforts of all her sons to win the race into which the great republics of South America have entered, that for the supremacy in Spanish-American civilization.—Mexican Financier.

THE DAIRY.

—Every dairyman should be prepared to feed green grass or green corn fodder in the stable, night and morning, as soon as the pasture begins to fail.—N. Y. Telegram.

—Under the new law, if a farmer, or large manufacturer in cities clandestinely manufacture oleomargarine or oleine, not only the machinery, but the farms, lots and buildings are forfeited to the Government.—Prairie Farmer.

—A dairyman says: "To keep butter fresh, work it until solid; make into rolls. Take two gallons of water, one pint of sugar, one level tablespoonful of saltpetre, make the brine strong enough to bear an egg; boil and skim. When cool, pour over the butter, and keep under brine with a weight. Butter will thus keep for a year as sweet as when churned."—Farm, Field and Stockman.

—Under the new order of farming dairying has become, with the aid of co-operation in butter or cheese factories, or both combined in one, as one of the "chores" rather than labors of the farm, the milking being done at morning and evening, and not usually interfering with the farm work, and as the revenue thus gained is likely to be nearly as much as other farm operations combined, the advantages of dairying can be readily seen.—Boston Post.

—The farmer who would plant and well cultivate enough ensilage and other corn to feed his stock all the forage they need, without relying upon much grass or hay, would find his farm as fertile, even if he sold hay, as under present general management; and if he would invest his hay money, if he can do no better, in more improved stock, he would soon have a larger income from the earnings of his cattle and a more valuable farm.—Hoard's Dairyman.

TREATMENT OF COWS.

How to Preserve the Flavor and Body of Milk from All Contamination.

Any harsh treatment that excites the cow lessens the quantity and injures the quality of her yield. Cows should be allowed an abundant supply of wholesome, suitable food and as much pure water as they will drink. A supply of salt should be placed where they have access to it every day. Cows should not be allowed to drink stagnant, impure water or to eat cleanings from horse stables, leeks, turnip tops or any thing that will give the milk an offensive taint. All milk vessels should be thoroughly cleansed, first being well washed, then scalded with boiling water and afterwards sufficiently aired to keep them perfectly sweet. The cows should be milked with dry hands and only after the udders have been washed or well brushed.

Milking should be done and milk should be kept only where the surrounding air is pure and free from all objectionable and tainting odors. Milking in a foul-smelling stable or yard imparts to milk an injurious taint. Sour whey should never be fed, nor should hogs be kept in a milking yard or near a milking stand. Tin pails only should be used. All milk should be properly strained immediately after milking, and for that purpose a detached strainer is preferable to a strainer pail. Good ventilation for a milk house, milk cellar or dairy room is most essential, and may be provided by leading an air drain underground for say two hundred feet. Through it a supply of pure, fresh, cool air may be admitted. The foul or warm air may be allowed to escape through the ventilators or windows in or near the ceiling.

Cream should invariably be removed from the milk before the milk is sour. The cream for each churning should be gathered into and kept in one vessel, and the whole should be well stirred every time fresh cream is added. In summer it should not be left longer than three days before churning. The best churning temperatures are between fifty and sixty degrees during the summer, and between sixty and sixty-four degrees during the winter. Butter can be more thoroughly washed free from buttermilk while in a granular condition than after it is gathered or pressed into a roll. Only the best pure salt, of medium and uniform fineness of grain should be used, and from three-quarters to an ounce of salt per pound of butter will be found satisfactory for the summer. The utmost cleanliness in milking, in utensils and in all surroundings can only preserve the flavor and body of milk, cream, butter and cheese from contamination.—N. Y. Herald.

GOOD AND BAD BUTTER.

Rapid Approach of the Time When Dairy Products Will Sell According to Quality.

The establishment of creameries has accomplished one good, apart from financial benefits accruing to owners and patrons. They have made the public better acquainted with what good butter really is, and consumers are becoming more exacting as to quality. This will compel the manufacture of a better article by farmers and dairymen. Formerly in local markets "butter," whatever the flavor, color or other characteristics, all sold at the same price. Now, except in some of the smaller towns, there is a wide range in the price. At some country stores all butter is still bought at a uniform price, sufficiently low to allow the dealer to make the necessary classification of "choice roll," "good country," "old grease," etc. Many butter-makers would be surprised and mortified if they knew how much of their product went into the latter class. These country dealers dislike to offend good customers by telling them their butter is inferior to that made by others, as farmer's wives especially are sensitive on this subject. The result is that those who make a really good article object to helping pay for inferior products, and send their butter to a market where a classification is made. Thus the "one-price" butter dealer is losing his trade, and the time will soon be when butter will sell everywhere according to quality. This will prove a great stimulus to the manufacturer of good butter and an undoubted benefit to the dairy. —Prairie Farmer.

Old and New Dairy Methods.

Men may write as much as they please about the ability of some men to make good butter in any of the many ways that are practiced in butter-making, but while it is true that "some men" can do wonders with poor materials, that is saying nothing for their intelligence if they still persist in using those materials when there are far better at hand. While it is true that every man has his own individual taste that he is entitled to, yet it is equally true that there are immutable principles of good taste that no amount of outside success can destroy. Fashions and notions go a long way in satisfying some men that their ways are best. Let them, however, keep their cranky notions to themselves, while the sensible folks go on improving their ways and making the world gradually better and happier.—American Dairyman.

—Scald every vessel you use about the manufacture of butter every time it is used. Do this thoroughly or all is lost.—Agriculture.

STARTING A DAIRY.

Some of the Conditions Necessary for Success in Dairying.

The low price of beef and pork, the great interest in the ranch and range cattle business and the uncertainty of producing paying crops of all kinds of grain have caused many stock raisers and farmers to consider the propriety of engaging in dairying. The passage by Congress of the oleomargarine bill has also had considerable effect in causing them to look favorably on dairying as perhaps the most reliable, if not the most profitable, department of husbandry. A careful observer in almost any portion of the Northern States will notice that dairy farmers are generally prosperous, even when the price of milk, butter and cheese is comparatively low. They ordinarily have well-managed places, excellent farm buildings, good horses and carriages, wind-mills for raising water and other conveniences for saving labor and promoting comfort. The conclusion drawn is that all these things were obtained by producing milk and manufacturing it into butter and cheese. As dairy farms look better than stock and grain farms, many come to the conclusion that they are generally much more profitable.

Cattle-raisers, grain producers and general farmers who are likely to be carried away by their fancied estimates of the profits of any branch of dairying would do well to remember that, as a rule, farmers are not likely to engage in milk production till they have acquired quite large means and have their places well improved. Their wealth and surroundings represent something more than the profits derived from producing milk for the city market or for manufacture into butter and cheese. Most of the prosperous dairy farmers in the country were very comfortably "fixed" before they abandoned the raising of grain and the production of wool and meat for keeping cows for their milk. Some of them had impoverished their soil by raising continuous crops of grain to such an extent that a change of management became necessary. They found it needful to devote their land to what the English call "resting crops," as clover and grass. Having done so they found dairying the most profitable branch of farming they could engage in. They had abundant means to stock their farms with cows and to employ help to tend them. In short, they were well prepared to succeed in the business of dairying.

Commercial dairying in this country started in Central New York, where the farmers had become quite wealthy by raising grain and cattle, and where the soil on most farms had been injured by raising wheat for many years in succession. From there it extended into Northern Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin, and finally into Iowa. In very few instances have farms been at first fitted up and prepared for keeping cows for their milk. They were, during several years, perhaps an average life-time, devoted to raising grain and stock to be sold for their meat. They cultivated grasses. An abundant supply of pure water, good roads and an abundant supply of persons who can be engaged as milkers are essential to success in dairying, and these can not ordinarily be found in a portion of the country but recently settled. A farmer who has not considerable capital can not safely engage in the profession of dairying, even though he has quite a large body of land. A good herd of dairy cows costs a large sum, and they require to be sheltered as well as work-horses are. They must be selected with care and judgment, or raised on the place from stock having a good milking record.

That as much money will ever be made by keeping dairy cows as was made during the late civil war and the few years that succeeded it is not unlikely. Cheese then retailed at twenty-five cents per pound and very choice butter commanded twice that price. The belief was then general that the so-called "dairy belt" was very limited in its extent. It was represented as being less than a hundred miles wide and as extending only from the Hudson to the Mississippi river. It was admitted that some butter and cheese for home consumption and for supplying local markets would be made in a few favorable places outside of this territory, but it was held that the "dairy belt" proper must supply the great markets of the country and furnish the supplies for export. The old "dairy belt" is extending in length and breath every year and already embraces about half the country. Distinct dairy breeds of cattle have been introduced from Europe. Cheese factories and creameries have been established in nearly every county in the Northern States, and the manufacture of dairy goods is conducted on scientific and business principles. That the dairy industry will continue to be reasonably prosperous is altogether likely. That it will be vastly more profitable than other branches of farming is improbable.—Chicago Times.

SELECTING SEED CORN.

Why It Should Be Done While the Crop is Still Standing in the Field.

The losses that occur every year from the employment of defective or inferior seed corn ought to impress every farmer with the necessity of a careful selection of seed at time of harvesting the crop. While the corn is yet standing in the fields this selection can be readily and judiciously made, but the corn once in the bins the farmer labors under serious disadvantages. In selecting seed four points should be taken into consideration—first, earliness of maturity; second, number of ears upon a stalk; third, size of the stalks, and fourth, perfection of the ears. Like produces like with seed as with animals. One can not expect to produce a large crop of corn when, for instance, five stalks have grown in a hill and but one has borne an ear. Every farmer knows that such corn is useless for seed.

The best ear for seed corn is the one that is uniform in size throughout its entire length, with straight rows and with early-formed grains the entire length.

Seed corn must be gathered before freezing weather and placed where it will begin immediately to dry. In the northern belt of States this drying question is an important one, for if the corn—especially the larger varieties—be not subjected to favorable conditions for drying, so that the seed corn will become thoroughly cured, cob included, it will result in failure through lack of germinating powers, while if properly cured it will sprout and grow under almost any condition.

Many farmers after having sun-dried their seed corn store it in the lofts of their smoke-houses in order that it may become permeated with the creosote from the smoke there, and thus gain a protection, when planted, against the depredations of field mice, worms and squirrels.—N. Y. World.

It may be applied with a brush, but great care should be taken that no drop of the acid shall come in contact with clothes or skin, as it is ruinous to garments and cuticle. —The Scottish Agricultural Gazette notes the fact that the feet are the most important part of a horse; and yet they are the soonest to fail, because the weaker part, and because we interfere more with nature in the treatment of the feet than is the treatment of any other member of the horse's body. Shoeing the feet of horses is a comparatively modern practice, and not a universal one even now.

—To pull wool well, remarks an exchange, is an art necessary for any sheep owner to know. Sprinkle the wet skins on the flesh side with air-slaked lime; lay the two skins together on the flesh side and pile up the pelts in a heap. In a few days the heap will sweat quite freely, when the wool parts from the skin easily and may be stripped off very readily. The secret is worth knowing and remembering.

FARM ANIMALS.

Thorough Feeding the Most Economical Policy That Can Be Pursued.

During the recent meeting of the New York Dairymen's Association Mr. Terry, of Norwich, N. Y., made an elaborate address on the subject of farm animals, which will be read with interest by dairymen and farmers everywhere. We have space only for the following leading points:

During the first cold storms in the fall many a mortgage is put upon our choicest cows. All stock should be sheltered early and during all cold, stormy weather. Give them light, warm and well-ventilated stables. No farmer can afford to feed his stock out in the field on the ground. In winter always feed in the barn and with a liberal hand.

Sometimes during the warm spring days I turn my stock into a dry field and feed them a little hay. I am convinced there is nothing gained by so doing, and I fear it is often done at a loss. If you ever have watched the stock of the enterprising farmer whose animals were well wintered you will find them to show the good effects through the summer season.

The labor and expense to raise an animal poorly is nearly the same as to raise it properly and keep it in a thriving condition. Stock will not thrive on poor feed and bad water. They should not be compelled to go fifty or one hundred rods through a pelting storm, then get down on their knees and suck the water through a hole in the ice. Running water in the barn or yard is a good investment.

During the months of November and December our farmers generally work off their coarse fodder. It is most always fed at a loss. Three-fourths of it would be worth more in the manure pile. Stock neglected in the month of November will require extra feed during the succeeding winter and spring to compensate for the poor feed they have received during that month. Stock should be fed from three to five times a day. Always be regular and feed with care. Cleanliness in all things should be observed. See that the feeding-troughs and mangers are clean after every meal.

High feeding is an important subject, and one that requires as much skill as any other branch of farming. Animals of the same breed will not thrive alike on the same feed. Some require more than others. A half-starved steer turned into a good pasture will sometimes make very good beef in the fall.

A steer that has been fed highly on grain and roots turned into the same pasture will not weigh any more in the fall than he did in the spring.

All animals should be pushed to early maturity and never be allowed to go back or even to stand still. We should study the necessities of animals to make improvements in stock-raising. Hay and grass is the natural food for cattle, but in connection therewith various kinds of grain should be raised, and the feed, if possible, all raised on the farm. Farmers can not do without wheat, bran and some roots. A dairyman should not be satisfied with a dairy of cows that will make less than two hundred and fifty pounds of butter each in a year.

Mr. Terry gives the following experiment in feeding two short-horn steer calves: They were born March 1 and fed the milk of their mothers for five days, when the milk was skimmed after settling, warmed and each fed eight quarts per day for four weeks. After that the milk was gradually increased to sixteen quarts per day, with the addition of wheat, bran and hay. The bran was increased gradually until at eight weeks old they received two pounds of bran and corn-meal per day each, until they were two hundred days old. When the milk began to grow scanty the bran and meal were increased to six pounds each per day.

At the age of 200 days they weighed 1,256 pounds, and had gained, from the time they were dropped, 1,106 pounds. This is at the rate of five and a half pounds a day. After they were 200 days old, they were fed six pounds of bran and corn-meal for eighty-eight days, when they weighed 1,544 pounds, thus gaining 288 pounds in eighty-eight days. In addition to the milk and meal feed they received all the good hay they would eat. When the milk began to fail, warm water was used and the ground feed increased from two pounds to six pounds. Dry hay was always fed when in stock and also sweet skim milk, adding enough warm water to make it lukewarm. At the age of 288 days, both animals were of the same weight—772 pounds each. The cost of the meal fed was $14.10. Estimating the milk at $14 and the hay at $8, the total cost aggregates $36.10. Estimating the value of the live weight at 4½ cents per pound, the amount reaches $69.48, leaving a balance of profit—pleasure and labor deducted—of $33.38.—N. Y. Herald.

Salt Rheum

Is the most common of all skin diseases and is often an exceedingly disagreeable. The skin becomes dry and hot, grows red and rough, and often breaks into painful cracks, while small watery pimples appear in great numbers, discharging a thin sticky fluid causing intense itching. Hood's Sarsaparilla has wonderful power over this disease. It purifies the blood and expels the humor, and the skin heals without a scar.

"I had salt rheum so bad it covered my entire body. It is impossible to describe my sufferings. When I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla the disease began to subside, the watery pimples with their agonizing itch and pain disappeared, and now I am cured." [illegible] Chicago, Ill.

"I suffered from wakefulness and low spirits, and also had eczema on the back of my head and neck, which was very annoying. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I have received so much benefit that I am very grateful and I am always glad to speak a good word for Hood's Sarsaparilla." Mrs. J. S. 100 Doses One Dollar

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. USE no other pill.

ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

The Bartholdi Statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island, New York Harbor, Unveiled.

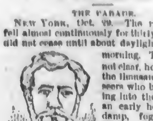
Grand Procession of the United States Navy and Military and Civic Societies.

Reviewed by the President and Cabinet and the Celebrated French Personages.

Speech of William M. Evarts Accepting the Statue—President Cleveland's Address—History of the Work Since Its Beginning.

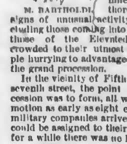
THE PARADE.

NEW YORK, Oct. 29.—The rain, which fell almost continuously for thirty-six hours, did not cease until about daylight yesterday morning. The sky did not clear, however, and the thousands of sight-seers who began pouring into the streets at an early hour, met a damp, foggy atmosphere, which threatened a renewal of the rain at any moment. Between eight and nine o'clock, all the thoroughfares showed signs of unusual activity. All trains, including those coming into town as well as those of the Elevated railroads, were crowded to their utmost capacity with people hurrying to advantageous points to view the grand procession.



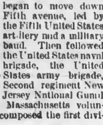
M. BARTHOLDI.

In the vicinity of Fifth avenue and Fifty-seventh street, the point at which the procession was to form, all was bustle and commotion as early as eight o'clock. Civic and military companies arrived faster than they could be assigned to their proper places, and for a while there was no little confusion.



GEN. C. P. STONE.

General Stone, the Grand Marshal, and his aides, however, soon brought order out of chaos, and at a few minutes past ten the head of the column began to move down Fifth avenue, led by the Fifth United States artillery and a military band. Then followed the United States naval brigade, the United States army brigade, Second regiment New Jersey National Guard and a detachment of Massachusetts volunteer militia. These composed the first division.

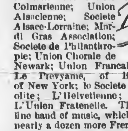


ALBERT GREVY.

The second division was led by Gilmore's band, which was greeted with applause. Then followed the First brigade N. Y. S. N. G., acting as escort to the French column. The French column contained the Societe Colmarienne; Union Alsacienne; Societe Alsace-Lorraine; Mardi Gras Association; Societe de Philanthropie; Union Chorale de Newark; Union Francaise, of Elizabeth; Le Prevoyance, of Boston; L'Amitie, of New York; le Societe Culinaire Cosmopolite; L'Helvetienne; L'Alliance and L'Union Fraternelle. Then came another line band of music, which was followed by nearly a dozen more French societies. Behind the Frenchmen were the United States Judges and other high officials of the United States, in carriages, and the Governors of States and Territories and other high dignitaries, also in carriages, who brought up the rear of the Second division.

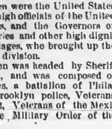
The third division was headed by Sheriff Grant, as Marshal, and was composed of the Mayors of cities, a battalion of Philadelphia police, Brooklyn police, Veterans of the War of 1812, Veterans of the Mexican War and the Military Order of the Loyal Legion.

The Fourth, Fifth and Sixth divisions were composed of military organizations. Then the Educational division, more military; Washington's carriage, drawn by eight horses, escorted by the Continental Guard, of Washington, and the Old Washington Continental Guard, mounted; firemen; Knights of Pythias, and other organizations, all helped to make up the other four divisions.



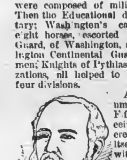
MAJ. GEN. SCHOFIELD

As this brilliant column passed down Fifth avenue it was received by the great crowd, which planted itself on either side, with clapping of hands and cheers. As the procession approached the reviewing stand, at Madison Square, where President Cleveland and his Cabinet were in waiting, a slight drizzle of rain began falling, not enough, however, to disturb the crowd or spoil the spectacle.



M. DE LESSEPS.

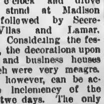
Passing through Madison Square the column moved down Fifth avenue to Washington Square, when it turned into Broadway, thence down Broadway to the open space behind the post-office, called Main street, into Park Row, under a triumphal arch in front of the World office, and back into Broadway. This detour was made in order to pay a compliment to the enterprise of the World in raising the sum necessary to build the pedestal for Bartholdi's great work.



ADMIRAL JAURES.

From Park Row the route was again down Broadway to Courtlandt street and Maiden lane, where most of the military, turning to the right or left, made their way to the river. The head of the procession reached the City Hall at noon.

President Cleveland, who was Secretary Whitney's guest, accompanied by Secretary Bayard, entered a carriage at ten o'clock and drove to the reviewing stand at Madison Square. He was followed by Secretaries Whitney, Vilas and Lamar, and Colonel Lamont. Considering the festive nature of the day, the decorations upon the private residences and business houses along the line of march were very meagre. This lack of display, however, can be accounted for by the inclemency of the weather for the past two days. The only really handsomely decorated building was the City Hall. After leaving Broadway at Cortlandt street and Maiden Lane, nearly all the military and civic companies made their way homeward.



GEN. PELISSIER.

All the vessels in North river were gaily decorated with flags, the great Atlantic lines being particularly noticeable as they lay at their docks, one mass of color aloft. The naval parade, which forms another marked feature of the day, was set for one o'clock. The sound of the preparatory gun, which should have been fired at 12:45 p. m., was not heard until one o'clock, and there was considerable delay in getting the vessels which were to take part into line. Twenty minutes later the signal for the start was given and the vessels moved slowly in double line, from Forty-fifth street down the North river, past the fleet of war vessels, toward Liberty Island. This procession was in charge of Lieutenant Commander Rich, and consisted of two divisions. The first division was headed by the United States coast survey steamer Gedney, and consisted of all the larger vessels; the second, of tugs and miscellaneous craft of all descriptions. The vessels presented a beautiful sight as they steamed down the Hudson.

On reaching Bedloe's Island they passed astern of the men-of-war anchored below the island, then up between them and the island they came to abreast of the statue, where they remained at anchor until the end of the ceremonies at that point. A gap was left directly abreast of the flagship Tennessee to permit the passage of the boats containing the Presidential party.

At 12:35 p. m. the President and his Cabinet left the reviewing stand. After partaking of lunch they were taken to the United States steamship Despatch, in which they sailed down the North river to Bedloe's Island. They were landed at the base of the statue, where they took part in the ceremonies of unveiling.

The statue is entitled "Liberty Enlightening the World." The name was bestowed upon it by M. Bartholdi. The idea aimed at was the symbolization of the progress of civilization and the growth of freedom, as expressed in the Republican form of government of these United States. It was also meant to perpetuate the friendship of the French and American nations begun in Revolutionary days, when this country was struggling to throw off the English yoke.

Rev. Dr. Storrs opened the ceremonies at the island with prayer. He prayed for prosperity upon the present company, and that the ceremonies of the unveiling might have God's blessing. He gave thanks for the kindly affection from one great people towards another and asked that we might make a right use of the occasion, that no violence of the elements or destroying earthquakes would ever render this great work futile, and that we might advance in the arts and sciences. He asked for prospering for the officers of the two nations, and that whatever was good in history might continue. The preacher ended with the Lord's Prayer in which the people joined.

General Schofield then introduced M. de Lesseps, who made a short speech in French congratulating the American people upon the progress they had made and praising their free institutions.

When de Lesseps had finished his address there were loud cries for Bartholdi, who came forward and bowed and waved his hat to the audience, and when the people insisted upon a speech from the sculptor, General Schofield abruptly cried out "Mr. Bartholdi has nothing to say, so there's no use of talking about it," and announced Senator Evarts, who presented the statute in the name of the American committee to the President of the United States. He spoke as follows:

The scene upon which this vast assemblage is collected displays a transaction in human affairs which finds no precedent on record in the past, nor in the long future, may we feel assured, will it ever confront its counterpart or parallel. How can we fitly frame in words the sentiments, the motives, the emotions which have filled and moved the hearts and minds of the two great nations, in the birth of this noble conception, the grand embodiment, the complete execution of the stupendous monument now unveiled to the admiring gaze of men, and emblazoned on its coronation of the finished work, with the plaudits of the world?

What ornament of speech, what eloquence of human voice, what costly gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh of our hearts' tribute can we bring to the celebration of this consummate triumph of genius, of skill, of labor, which speaks to-day, and will speak forever the thoughts, the feelings, the friendships of these two populous powerful and free republics, knit together in their pride and joy at their own established freedom, and in their hope and purpose that the glad light of liberty shall enlighten the world. For this arduous theme the American committee has had the good fortune to present an eminent citizen and accomplished orator, from grateful and pleased attention to whose eloquence the simple office the committee has asked me to discharge, will not long detain this expectant multitude. In the conflict which agitated and divided the people of the United States and aroused the loyalty and patriotism of the country, to the maintenance of constituted liberties, the liberty-loving people of France felt an intense and solicitous interest. When the issue of this struggle was upheld and confirmed the government maintained its unbroken unity and made all of its people equal and free, the liberty loving people of France hailed the triumph with an immense and vivid enthusiasm. Nor was this enthusiasm to be satisfied, but by some adequate and permanent expression of their sympathy in our fiery trial, and congratulations at the absolute supremacy of the principles and institutions which had put in peril and had come out from it, without the smell of fire upon their garments. To this energetic movement of the French people there was added their historic and momentous friendship in securing our independence and the reciprocal influences which had shaped and confirmed the free and equal institutions of the two countries, and to the working of all these motives and sentiments of an ardent and generous people, we owe—the world owes—this visible and perpetual embodiment of the love of liberty, animating the two nations, which stands before us to-day. To this realization the people of France brought the fervor and inspiration of Laboulaye and Henri Martin, the Lafayettes, and their illustrious companions to spread abroad in all intelligent and upright minds the seal of their own high purposes. They drew from the well furnished numbers of their accomplished and distinguished artists, the genius, the courage, the devotional spirit, the indomitable sculptor, Bartholdi, whose well-earned fame justified the trust committed to him, and whose work covers, with its splendors, the gifted artist, his illustrious art and the happy country which gave him and his labors to all this work. They furnished the exquisite artisanship and the constructive skill and scientific training and honest and hearty labor, which have together wrought out, in stubborn brass and iron, the artist's dream, the airy conception of his mind, the shapely sculpture of his cunning hand, till here it stands upon its firm base, as if a natural playmate of the elements, fearing no harm from all the winds that blow. The people of France, too, contributed from many slender means, and of their free will, the aggregated wealth demanded for so vast an undertaking, and from their hearts as well as from their purses, and all for love of liberty abroad, and in hearty homage to the friendship of these great republics.

The committee have no occasion to insist upon the share which the people of the United States have taken in the humbler office of furnishing a pedestal not unworthy of the statue, nor unworthy of our grateful acceptance of this noble gift and appreciation of the generous disposition which prompted it. In the perfected and completed work of the pedestal, the genius of the architect, the sagacity, the varied scientific and practical accomplishment of the engineer-in-chief, the constructing faculty and experience of the builder, and the manifold and masterly performances the skilled workmen upon this prodigious structure, and in the elevating and security of the statute have all been combined to set out the statue for the admiration of our own people and of all comers to our shores. As with the French people, so with our own—the whole means of the great expenditure of the work has come from the free contributions of the people themselves, and thus the common people of both nations may justly point to a greater, a nobler monument in and of the history and progress and welfare of the human race than Emperors or Kings or governments have ever raised.

Mr. President, upon the recommendation of the President of the United States, Congress authorized and directed the President to accept the colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World when presented by citizens of the French republic, and to designate and set apart for the direction thereof a suitable site upon either Governor's or Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, and upon the completion thereof shall cause the same to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for the expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister Republic.

The statue, on the 4th of July, 1884, in Paris, was delivered to and accepted by the Government, by the authority of the President of the United States, delegated to and executed by Minister Morton. To-day, in the name of the citizens of the United States, who have completed the pedestal and raised thereon the statue, and of the voluntary committee who have executed the will of their fellow citizens, I declare, in your presence, in the presence of these distinguished guests from France, and of this august assemblage of the honorable and honored men of our land and of this countless multitude, that this pedestal and the united work of the two republics is complete and surrendered to the care and keeping of the Government and the people of the United States.

When Mr. Evarts had delivered about two-thirds of his address he mentioned the name of Bartholdi, which was the occasion of the audience breaking forth into loud cheers. This was mistaken on the part of those who had charge for the conclusion of the address, when the unveiling was to take place. Accordingly the flag was withdrawn from the face of the statue. This was the signal to the steamers and batteries, and they immediately began a mighty salvo of cannonading and whistling, amid which Mr. Evarts helplessly took his seat. The salvo was continued without cessation for fully twenty minutes. When this had ceased and Gilmore's band had played the Marseillaise hymn, Yankee Doodle and the Star Spangled Banner, President Cleveland stepped to the front of the stage and said:

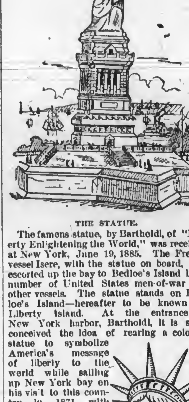
MR. CHAIRMAN AND FELLOW CITIZENS—The people of the United States accept with gratitude to-day from their brethren of the French republic the grand and completed work of art we here inaugurate. This token of affection and consideration of the people of France demonstrates the kinship of republics and conveys to us the assurance that in our efforts to commend to mankind the excellence of a government resting upon popular will we still have beyond the American continent a steadfast ally. We are not here to-day to bow before the representation of a fierce and warlike god, filled with wrath and vengeance, but we joyously contemplate instead our own deity, keeping watch and ward before the open gates of America, and greater than all that have been celebrated in ancient song. Instead of grasping in her hand thunderbolts of terror and of death, she holds aloft the light which illuminates the way to man's enfranchisement. We will not forget that liberty has here made her home; nor shall her chosen altar be neglected. Willing votaries will constantly keep alive its fires and these shall gleam upon the shores of our sister republic in the East. Reflected thence and joined with answering rays a stream of light shall pierce the darkness of ignorance and man's oppression until liberty enlightens the world.

M. A. Lefaivre, Ministre Plenipotentiaire et Delegue Extraordinaire, representative on behalf of the Republic of France, was then introduced and made a short address, in which he extolled the generosity of the American people and expressed the hope that the same unanimity of feeling that had existed between the two great nations for the last century would continue to guide and direct their connection in the future.

Gilmore's band then rendered some choice selections and then General Schofield announced Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, who delivered the commemorative oration.

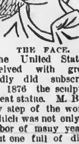
When Mr. Depew had finished his oration the Doxology was sung by all standing, after which Bishop Potter pronounced the benediction. The assemblage, which had patiently sat in that rain during the long exercises then made speed to the boats. With the exception of the President and his party and the French delegates no order of embarkation was observed, and "high and low, rich and poor, one with another," made their best individual efforts to reach the city, which both the falling darkness and the mist rendered invisible to the throngs of anxious home seekers. The National salute was fired, the steamers as usual joining in and swelling the general uproar. The island was quickly depopulated of all except the few left on guard, the display of fireworks and lighting of the statue being postponed on account of the rain, and sweet-faced liberty was left alone with her torch high uplifted in the air and her eyes bent towards the lands of her birth.

The French guests were entertained in the evening by the Chamber of Commerce at Delmonico's. The hall was gaily decorated with the tri-color and the Stars and Stripes, and presented a brilliant spectacle. Toasts were offered and responded to.



THE STATUE.

The famous statue, by Bartholdi, of "Liberty Enlightening the World," was received at New York, June 19, 1885. The French vessel Isere, with the statue on board, was escorted up the bay to Bedloe's Island by a number of United States men-of-war and other vessels. The statue stands on Bedloe's Island—hereafter to be known as Liberty Island. At the entrance to New York harbor, Bartholdi, it is said, conceived the idea of rearing a colossal statue to symbolize America's message of liberty to the world while sailing up New York bay on his visit to this country in 1871, with heart depressed at the ruin and wretchedness in his native land after her defeat by Germany. On his return to France he suggested to his friends his idea of such a statue to be presented by the French nation to the United States. The idea was received with great favor, and so rapidly did subscriptions come in that in 1876 the sculptor began work upon his great statue. M. Bartholdi supervised every step of the work, which was not only a labor of many years, but one full of difficulty and detail. The first step towards its construction were made in 1874, when the French-American union was established, a banquet given and an appeal made to the people of France. In 1876 the sculptor began actual work. First the artist made his model in clay, and when this was approved a plaster statue was made, in dimensions it was one-sixteenth the size of the intended statue. Another plaster statue four times as large as the first, and a third one, of the full dimensions of the finished work were made. The last model had to be made in sections, and a wooden frame-work was constructed on which the plaster was spread. When these sections were completed, wooden models were used, exact copies of the plaster in size and modeling. These were carefully cut out by hand, and in them were shaped the hammered brass work which forms the outside of the statue. Eighty-eight tons of brass were used in the structure, and the entire weight of the statue is 450,000 pounds.



THE FACE.

THE TORCH.

In 1876 M. Bartholdi, with the extended right arm of the statue—the first part that was completed—came to America and placed the arm and torch in the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, whence it was subsequently removed to Madison Square, New York. In February, 1877, Congress set apart Liberty Island for the statue, and a committee was chosen with William M. Evarts at its head. The face and head of the statue was completed in 1878, when it was placed in the French Exposition, and on July 7, 1880, the great figure was completed in Paris, where it was temporarily put together the following year in the presence of the United States Minister and a gathering of prominent French people. This statue is a free gift of respect and good will from the people of France to those of America. On the tablet is the inscription "4th of July, 1776." It may well rank with the wonders of the world, for in design and achievement it is a model of sublime conception, nobly wrought out. The pedestal on which the statue stands was built with funds raised in this country by private subscription. The following are the dimensions of the statue:

A POEM BY WHITTIER.

The Independent publishes the following poem by John G. Whittier on the Statue of Liberty:

> The land that, from the rule of kings,
> In freeing us, itself made free,
> Our Old World sister to us brings
> Her sculptured Dream of Beauty.
> Unlike the shapes on Egypt's sands
> Uplifted by the toil-worn slave,
> On Freedom's soil with freemen's hands
> We rear the symbol free hands gave.
> O France, the beautiful; to thee
> Once more a debt of love we owe,
> In peace beneath thy fleur de lis,
> We hail a later Rochambeau.
> Rise, stately symbol; holding forth
> Thy light and hope to all who sit
> In chains and darkness. Belt the earth
> With watch-fires from thy torch uplit.
> Reveal the primal mandate still
> Which chaos heard and ceased to be.
> Trace on mid air th' Eternal will
> In signs of fire: "Let man be free."
> Shine far, shine free, a guiding light
> To Reason's ways and Virtue's aim,
> A lightning flash the wretch to smite
> Who shields old shame with thy name.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

A Fast Passenger Train Runs Into an Open Switch and is Ditched—The Cars Take Fire and Burn Up Many of the Passengers—Collide on a Curve.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 29.—The limited passenger train on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road, which left here Wednesday night at ten o'clock, was derailed at Rio, and thrown into an old stone quarry. Particulars are hard to get, but it is admitted at the general office of the company in this city, that one coach and three sleepers were wrecked, and five or six persons killed.

LATER—The latest particulars of the terrible railway catastrophe are that the day coach contained upward of twenty passengers. When the open switch was struck and the shock came the momentum of the sleepers in the rear of the day coach was so great that the latter broke in two directly in the center, rearing up and forming an inverted V. The day car then blazed up with fire and the cries and struggles of the dying inside were simply indescribable. Among the passengers were Mrs. Rosina Johns, Mrs. Scherer, her daughter-in-law and the latter's two little children, of Winona. The two brave women—especially the brave mother—succeeded, by almost superhuman efforts, in pushing the little ones through a window to the outside, and then they perished in the flames. The loving mother sacrificed her life for her children.

The mail car was in charge of John Beaks, of Plainfield, Wis., and five men. All these escaped with injuries of a more or less serious nature. They succeeded in saving most of the valuable mail matter. Sixty bags of newspapers were destroyed, but most of the letter bags were saved. The two Scherer children, of Winona, are the only ones in the day car known to have been saved. The rest not only all perished, but most of them will, perhaps, never be identified. It is regarded as one of the most terrible railroad disasters that ever occurred in the Northwest.

Among the known victims are: Mrs. Rosina Johns, Winona; Mrs. Scherer, Winona; Louis Brinter, Columbus; Emil Waltersdorf, Columbus.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 29.—About midnight Wednesday night a collision occurred between an eastbound and a westbound train on the Wabash railroad near Edwardsville Junction, Ill. The two trains collided on a curve and resulted in great damage to the rolling stock. William Ballou, baggage and express man was crushed to death by the contents of the car falling upon him.

Ex-Judge Walter B. Scates, who died at Evanston, Ill., the other day, of paralysis, was seventy-eight years old and was born at South Barton, Va. He settled early in Illinois and became attorney general of the State and in 1836 Justice of the Supreme Court. He was on General McClellan's staff during the war and was collector of customs at Chicago under President Johnson, being removed by President Grant

A Mountain 800 Feet High Rises From the Bottom of a Lake 3,000 Feet Deep.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Nov. 1.—A letter published in this evening's Bulletin under date of Apia, October 15, says: "Authentic news has reached Samoa that on the morning of September 10 over 100 heavy earthquakes occurred on the Island of Niuafou, one of the Tonga group, and that from the bottom of a lake, which had a depth of 3,000 feet a mountain has arisen to the height of 800 feet above the surface, also that this mountain has burst out in flames and thrown out hot stones and sand in such quantities as to destroy two-thirds of the cocoanut trees on the island. In Samoa we are having light shocks of earthquake so frequently now that they are no longer noticed by the residents."

MEXICAN REVENGE.

The Governor of Sonora on the War Path—Fifteen People Killed and a Number Wounded.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 31.—A special from Nogales, Ariz., to the Globe-Democrat says: It has just transpired here that the Governor of Sonora is implicated in a murder which had for its motive political consequences. The particulars are meager, but it is known that the Governor learned that the parties who killed his cousin were in the village of Montezuma, and that they had a considerable following. He made a raid upon the village and in the fight that ensued several on both sides were killed and many wounded. Later. The raid of Governor Torres, of Sonora, Mex., and his men into Montezuma district was more fatal than was at first supposed. From reliable Mexican gentlemen who are residents of this town, your correspondent learns the following facts: After the killing of Prefecto Torres, who was a cousin of the Governor, the Governor resolved upon some sort of vigorous retaliation. A couple of weeks ago the Governor, accompanied by Commandante Torres, a cousin of his, with 150 troops, started for Montezuma District. At the town of Montezuma, the capital of the district, they met the revolutionists, headed by Mayor Vallarde. This was the same party that killed Prefecto Torres. Governor Torres on seeing the party made ready for fight, but subsequently an armistice was held, but the blood on either side being warm, no amicable conclusion was arrived at, and Governor Torres, pulling his pistol, fired and killed Vallarde in his tracks. A fierce fight then ensued, which resulted in fifteen men being killed and several wounded. It is impossible to get the facts relating to the number of wounded and the nature of their wounds, but enough is known to warrant the statement that a good deal of blood was shed. Commandante Torres, who accompanied the Governor, is the brother of the Prefecto recently killed near Campus by the revolutionists. This fight occurred on Tuesday last.

THREE ACRES OF FIRE.

Extraordinary Fire in the Standard Mines, Near Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

CONNELLSVILLE, PA., Oct. 31.—The fire at the Standard mines, near Mt. Pleasant, which originated yesterday afternoon, is still raging, and is hourly gaining headway. Flame and smoke, driven by a strong current of air, leap from the mouth of the shaft to the height of one hundred feet above the ground. All efforts to check the fire have been of no avail. A fire engine from Pittsburgh arrived to-night, and the work of flooding the mine will be begun at once. This will require several months. It is thought that nearly three acres of coal are now ablaze. The amount of loss can not now be estimated, for the entire plant will have to suspend operations for several months, thus throwing 600 men out of employment. The daily output of the shaft was 1,500 tons, and, in consequence of its being idle, it will result in the closing down of 500 coke ovens, or one-twentieth of the whole Connellsville region.

Heartless Boys Responsible For a Murder.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 31.—Jos Maachaner is a poor, deformed boy of this city, seventeen years of age, who has been nicknamed "Jo-Jo" by boys of the city in consequence of his resemblance to the Russian dog-faced boy. He had an eye knocked out when a child, his jaw and nose broken, and is otherwise injured by a kick from a horse a short time ago, and now presents a frightful appearance. The boys have been in the habit of following "Jo" around pelting him with mud. They chased him for a distance last night until, becoming angry, he threw a large bowlder at his tormenters. John Bennett, an innocent wayfarer, happened to be in the line of the stone. It struck him squarely in the chest. He sat down confused, but recovered sufficiently to walk home, and died almost instantly on reaching there.

Fatal Blasting Accident.

BRAZIL, IND., Oct. 31.—A fatal accident occurred yesterday at the new coal mine of Seller & Sigler, six miles south-east of Brazil. Joseph Elliot and John Phillips were trying to extract a charge of blasting powder which had failed to explode. When they had nearly reached the powder it became ignited and exploded with terrific force, blowing both arms from the body of Elliott, from the effects of which he died a few hours after. Phillips is badly injured. He will hardly recover, but if he does will probably be totally blind.

An Earthquake Spring at Charleston.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 31.—A slight tremor was felt here at 2:20 this afternoon. It caused no damage, and was not felt by a majority of the people. Shortly after the shock a spring of clear, pure water appeared in the Custom-house yard, and is still running at the rate of a gallon a minute. The water is said to have been hot when the flow began. There were two slight shocks at Summerville to-day.

KINGSTON, PA., Oct. 31.—Just as John Brodda, the footman, was running a car upon the cage of the bottom of the shaft at a colliery near here, the engineer, William Moses, started the engine to hoist the cage. Brodda was caught between the cage and the brattice and instantly killed. As soon as the engineer learned of what happened, though not in the least to blame for Brodda's death, he shot himself dead.

Two Men Killed by a Train.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 31.—Two unknown Italians, who were walking on the track, were struck by a freight train near Pine Creek, on the West Pennsylvania railroad to-night, and instantly killed.

HE WEAKENS.

Manager Weir on the Track of the Confederates in the Express Robbery.

The Adams Express Company's Loss Now Admitted to be Over One Hundred Thousand Dollars.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 29.—Manager Weir, of the Adams Express Company, was called out of the city by a telegram this evening and Superintendent Damsel says that they are now sure of catching the robber. Where he is gone is a mystery as yet and all information as to new developments is refused the newspapers, but it seems probable that Fotheringham has weakened and made a confession and that his confederate will soon be in custody. The amount stolen is now admitted to have been over $100,000. Interesting developments may be looked for to-morrow.

The Thunderer Spiteful.

LONDON, Oct. 29.—The second editorial of the Times of this morning is devoted to the dedication ceremonies of the statue of Liberty. It designates the whole affair as being a curious festival, and asks why liberty should be exported from France, which has so little thereof, to America, which has so much. The article is written throughout in an altogether spiteful and contemptible vein, which shows but too clearly the prevailing jealousy of the United States in this country as well as the old hatred of France. M. Bartholdi is designated as an Alsatian sculptor, who is a convinced republican, with a propensity for doing things that shall insure him against obscurity and oblivion.

A Curious Geological Discovery.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—While engaged in geological work in the Atlantic Division, Prof. Shaler discovered a point of much interest in its bearing on the nature of the recent changes of level of the New England Coast. It is that the rivers which flow from south to north have a great amount of marshes in their valleys and hardly a trace of alluvial terraces, while the rivers which run from north to south are not bordered with swamps, and all have distinct terraces. He offers as an explanation the theory that the shore has all been tilted up to the northward, thus partly destroying the drainage of the rivers which flow northwardly.

Another Bond Call.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—The Secretary of the Treasury this afternoon issued the 144th call for the redemption of bonds. The call is for $10,000,000 of bonds of the 3 per cent. loan of 1882, and notice is given that the principal and accrued interest of the bonds herein below designated will be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in Washington, D. C., on the first day of December, 1886, and that the interest on said bonds will cease on that day.

The Bear Growls.

SOFIA, Oct. 29.—General Kaulbars has sent a fresh note to the Bulgarian Foreign Minister, in which he says: "In view of the fact of the arrival at Varna of emmissaries of the Provisional Government of Bulgaria and the spreading reports that the arrival of Russian gunboats at that port is without importance, I am compelled to inform you that the said gunboats will vigorously affirm their importance if events should render such action necessary."

Canadian Vessel Seized.

CHICAGO, Oct. 29.—U. S. Treasury Inspector McHale seized the Canadian steam barge Isaac May here to-day for towing the schooner Severn between Chicago and South Chicago. A foreign vessel towing another between two American ports is subject to a penalty of fifty cents per ton on her gross tonnage. Under this act the vessel was seized, and will be held to await a decision from Washington.

Crushed in the Cogs.

MEADVILLE, PA., Oct. 29.—Thomas G. Ferguson, a millwright of Buffalo, was instantly killed at the Meadville Distillery this morning while engaged in setting up machinery. He was twenty seven years old and unmarried. No one witnessed the accident, but his mangled remains found beneath a pair of cog-wheels left no doubt as to accidental death while surveying his work.

An American Hanged at Victoria.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 29.—Robert Evan Sproule, a citizen of the United States, was hanged here this morning at 8:10 o'clock, for the murder of Thomas Hamlin in June, 1885, in the Kootenay Mines. The condemned man ascended the scaffold without a tremor, and made a short speech protesting his innocence.

Three Trains in One Wreck.

BELLOWS FALLS, VT., Oct. 29.—This morning, at Gassett's Station, a mixed freight and passenger train was run into in the rear by an extra freight train following it, and that by a regular freight train, on a bridge, wrecking all three trains. TERRIBLE HOLOCAUST.

Cremation of a Coach Full of Passengers—About Twenty-Six Lose Their Lives.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Oct. 29.—A special from Portage says last night soon after midnight the westbound limited was ditched at East Rio siding, a small station on the main line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road. There are two side tracks at the place, and at the time the train was due there last night both were occupied by freights, one by a wild train and the other by train No. 14, which had just pulled in from the west to allow the limited to pass. No. 14 was very long, and the conductor was at the head of the train relying upon the brakeman to attend to the switch. One report says the rear brakeman, whose business it was to close the switch after the train, started back to close the switch, but before he could reach it the limited came tearing down grade at fifty miles an hour and left the rails at the open switch. The sidings are in a cut where the road curves so that the switch light can not be seen from the east until a train is within a few rods, so the engineer of the limited could not see the switch light turned wrong until too late to stop. The engine left the track, ran a short distance and brought up against the side of the cut toppling over. The baggage-car and two regular coaches followed, while four sleepers kept the rails. The engine and the cars that went off were badly smashed, and took fire from the stoves. Engineer Little and Fireman Eagan crawled out from under the locomotive, badly bruised and scalded. The baggageman had a leg broken. All the passengers in the sleepers got out uninjured, except slight bruises, but in one day coach 13 were pinned in and literally burned to death. Many others were injured by the severe shaking up. The whole train, except one sleeper, which they were able to uncouple and draw away, was burned up. Passengers from the sleepers gathered around the blazing cars, but they were powerless to render assistance. Men and women could be seen tearing their hair in the agony of the moment, and frightful screams issued from the death trap. One heavy woman in particular, tore up one of the seats with almost superhuman strength, and endeavored to break her way out of the flaming pyre, but her strength failed, and she fell to the floor and met a horrible death. Only three persons escaped from the car. Later.—A dispatch to the Sentinel estimates the number of people burned at twenty-six. A force of men has been engaged to-night in raking over the ruins of the coaches. At 11 o'clock the charred remains of eleven victims had been taken out.

THE TWO SAMS.

A Distiller Makes Them an Unusual Gift at Toronto.

TORONTO, ONT., Oct. 28.—Sam Jones and Sam Small, the Georgia evangelists, who have been conducting services here daily since the 8th instant, assisted by Professors Excell, of Chicago, and Maxwell, of Cincinnati, held their farewell services yesterday, at which over five thousand people were present. Mr. Jones was presented with a draft for $2,500, on behalf of himself and fellow-laborers, as a substantial recognition of their work. William Gooderham, a prominent distiller, sent a sum, amount not given, to be invested for the benefit of the evangelists' wives.

Called to Battle.

DUBLIN, Oct. 28.—United Ireland tells the Irish tenants that the time for patient endurance is passed, and says it is time for them to stand up and fight hard, hitting from the shoulder. The Unionists, it says, have been in power for six months, and have not made an attempt to suppress the National League, which is stronger, more active and more resolute than ever, and laughs at the Government devices, bluster and threats. The paper taunts the Government with being afraid to use coercion. A large number of landlords in West Clare made a reduction in their rents to-day. The rents on the Browne estates were reduced forty per cent., and on the O'Kelly estates thirty per cent. Colonel Stewart made a reduction of twenty and Captain Morgan of fifteen per cent. The tenants generally are paying.

A Needed Invention.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 28.—Conductor George Clark, of the Eastern Division of the Wabash, has invented a station annunciator for use in passenger coaches. It is a combination of cards showing the name of each station in large letters. A bell calls the attention of passengers to the card at each stopping place. This invention will do away with yelling the names of each station—so far as the reading portion of the public are concerned.

The Cholera in Japan.

YOKOHAMA, Oct. 13.—Though the cholera in Japan is somewhat abating, the mortality is still enormous. From September 27 to October 9 there were 6,014 cases, and 4,435 deaths. In Tokio 483 new cases occurred, and 409 deaths. The returns for four weeks ending September 25, give 34,908 cases, and 23,774 deaths, an average mortality of over 68 per cent.

What Won't They Do Next?

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Two patents have been issued to Mr. Lucius J. Phelps, of New York, on duplex telegraphy. Under these inventions it is claimed that the same wire used for telegraphing to or from trains may be worked "duplex," thereby enabling it to be used as an ordinary Morse wire between stations, and simultaneously used for telegraphing to and from moving trains.

Another big strike is on in Chicago. Six thousand of the employes at the stock-yards have gone out. Chicago never does anything by halves.

This country has within it to-day an immense army of fellows whose free drinks were discontinued with the closing of the polls last night.

A very light vote was polled at this place last Tuesday. Everything passed off so quietly that a person could not tell that an election was in progress.

In this issue we publish the lecture delivered by Prof. G. A. Yates before the Teachers' Association in Burlington Saturday week. Teachers, read it.

The one-eyed confidence man, Chas. W. Henderson, has been captured again, and not by Louisville officials this time. His escape will not be again planned by those high in authority, in Kentucky.

Those aspiring to State offices now have a clear field in which to operate, the last obstruction, the Congressional canvass, having been removed. They can now commence spreading themselves over the State at pleasure.

The light vote polled in this county Tuesday is no indication that the people are dissatisfied with their Congressman. Had he had any formidable opposition, the Democrats would have rallied in solid phalanx to his support.

Covington recently voted $600,000 for building new water works. At the time the vote was taken the commissioners had not been appointed, and if they had, judging from the storm of indignation now raging there, not a dollar would have been voted.

About fifty head of stock cattle were on the market in Burlington Monday, and but few were sold, and they at small figures, owing, no doubt to the very poor condition of fall pastures. We would like to see Messrs. Conner meet such encouragement from the farmers as to induce them to make a permanent business of having cattle on the market on County Court days.

The appointment of water commissioners in Covington has created a tremendous kick, and the Commonwealth intimates that had Judges Arthur and Menzies and Mayor Athey had the power and made the appointments previous to their recent election, that it would have compassed their defeat. If the indignation is as strong as represented those appointed would cool matters off considerably by not accepting the trust.

This protracted dry weather is becoming a serious matter with the farmers, not only because water for stock is very scarce, but because of the extremely long period of feeding which is bound to be the inevitable result of the drought now prevailing. The good crops which were raised this season will offset the effects of the fall drought in providing an abundance of food for carrying stock through the winter. The outlook might be very much worse.

The report of Commissioner Edgar Cropper, filed Monday, shows that county's indebtedness to be about $4,200 outside of the poorhouse expense which at present is about $1,200. To pay these sums with the sheriff has in his hands about $6,000, which amount will be reduced about $1,200 on account of the delinquent list yet to be reported by the sheriff. This is no bad showing for the county.

EDUCATION IN KY.

The fault of our educational work does not lie in the system adopted by the State, but in the want of interest manifested by the citizens. I [illegible] school work [illegible] and private, and I believe that the remedy is not in [illegible] is somewhat a [illegible] policy.

The fault we [illegible] to rest at fault. The school law, as it now stands, would enable every village and school district in the State to maintain a first class school for ten months in every year if there was public school enterprise to do so. As it now stands this is not only not done, but by a crippled and parsimonious policy, in most school communities, the public school success is in neither [illegible] doing good [illegible], nor allowing private schools to supply the deficiency. There is usually a hidden cheap teacher, who will teach the longest session for the "public draw," and these too frequently destroy rather than encourage school enterprise.

In this respect the "public money" is destructive to our true educational policy.

The original idea of the public school fund of this State was that it was to supplement local contributions for school purposes. It supposed that every citizen who was able would furnish educational facilities for his offspring. But in view of the fact, potent in every age of the world, and in every locality, that there are always some who are not able to so provide, a public fund was created that the poor might not feel the humiliation of public assistance in this line of duty, and that the State might be benefited by raising up and training these children for good citizenship, no public discrimination was made in favor of the children of indigent parents. The effect has been that the average citizen who "pays taxes" is so anxious for his share of the "public money," that all private contributions have, in a large measure ceased.

The attempt to supplement the "public money" by local taxation has also failed, except in towns, cities and some districts, acting mostly under special charters or legislative enactments. This brings upon us the question now pending as regards our educational policy: "Should the State educate the youth and prepare them for good citizenship?" All our enactments and all our efforts as teachers and educators point to an affirmative answer. We have, without fully comprehending our progress passed beyond the Rubicon on this issue; and we must provide for our subsistence. The State, by her policy, has undertaken to educate for citizenship. Is she doing it well? I undertake to say she is not. If this question could be answered affirmatively, every child would have school opportunities as well as school privileges. As it is, every child has certain legal school privileges, but frequently no opportunities that will enable him to avail himself of these privileges. To illustrate: In one of our hilly districts there are enumerated 100 pupils. These are scattered over an area so large that only 60 can attend, and the average attendance is less than 50 per cent. of the enumerated enrollment. The teacher agrees to teach for the "public draw" for a term of 5 months. He receives the munificent sum of $165, or $33 per month. If the 100 pupils were to attend he could not proceed without at least one assistant. To divide this upon the important comparison of principal and assistant, the respective wages would be $20, and $13 per month. And the School House! Where is one in any district of 100 pupils that will accommodate them? Where there is so little enterprise as to paying the teacher it is reasonable to conclude that no school house could be built to accommodate so many pupils. But the fact is that one teacher is poorly paid to teach about 50 or 60 per cent. of the pupils enumerated, and the rest go untaught. And this is proportionately true of every district in the State.

The State then does not provide for the education of all the children. You may readily suggest a remedy, and ask why not enact a law to assess pro rata all who attend, and thus provide for better pay for the teacher, better houses and sufficient apparatus? You are met here with a legal and Constitutional issue—Your trustees must make oath, in order to draw the public money, that every child in the district of school age, has had the privilege of attending, whether contributing anything towards supporting the school or not; and here steps in your miserly, parsimonious "old fogy" and avails himself of this opportunity of "getting back some of his taxes." Local taxation has failed through the same influence, private contributions have been discontinued, the public money is inadequate, and the Constitution of the State prevents the enforcement of pro rata tuition for those who attend. Now, I ask, "Does the State educate well?"

The only remedy under existing conditions is in local taxation. If we cannot get this by a legislative enactment, disregarding local opinion we had better repeal all laws providing for taxation for school purposes, and remand the duty of educating back to the family. As it is, the State has taken this important duty from the family and does not attend to it properly itself.

I have recently read a very able work entitled Compayre's History of Pedagogy, and I learn from this that when the European governments undertook [illegible] the duty of educating the youth, a complete system of government education was provided and enforced. True these were despotic governments, or at least monarchical, and a system of education was provided in harmony with their [illegible] system. In our government the people are the sovereign authority, and while I would remand this duty to the States according to my interpretation of our Federal Constitution, I would not allow local public sentiment within the States, to prevent the development of an educational policy that would reach every "nook and corner" where ignorance is likely to be nursed. If the State is not willing to collect and distribute to every school district by a general tax, the whole people may vote to enforce a local tax in every county, or even school district. I would advocate the enactment of a State law that would require a supplementary local tax in every county to support the public schools, or I would repeal all taxes for school purposes.

But you may ask "How about Federal Aid?" I have no objection to Federal Aid to assist those communities that have been disastrously affected by the Civil War, but I think it bad policy to offer aid to those who will not make an effort, at least, to help themselves. I speak this in the abstract.

The "Blair bill," which passed the Senate and failed in the House of Representatives, is so severely criticized that I am not able to approve it upon my mature judgment. The teacher will, as a matter of course, look with favor upon any scheme that will give him better wages; and, in this view I have held a sentiment in its favor, but if the State school land has had the effect, as I believe it has, to enervate our people as to educational effort, it is a question with me whether or not we would be benefitted by Federal aid. While I would not introduce anything likely to lead to a political party spirit in our educational work, I feel that holding the sentiment that Hon. J. G. Carlisle does on the relations of the Federal and State Governments, his opposition to the Blair bill should not be construed into a cherished hostility to public school education, and I doubt not that he favors the betterment of our schools through State and county efforts.

I beg leave, in conclusion, to thank you, fellow teachers, for your generous invitation to address you on this occasion, and I trust that, whatever differences may exist between us as to the suggestions made, you will regard me at all times as being in sympathy with every well directed effort to improve our schools and make our educational system, both in theory and practice, equal to any other in the Nation; and I respectfully suggest that the best means of building up our school interests is to make ourselves so worthy of patronage that we may go forth with power among the people, and influence a public sentiment that will cause us to witness good school houses, and good schools in the remotest corners of our Commonwealth.

STATE NEWS.

In Woodford county new corn $1.60 a barrel.

One merchant, of Lexington, sold 20,000 pounds of oleomargarine last year.

Engagements of new corn are being made in Owen county at $1 50 per barrel. A few sales have been made at $1 25.

The Jessamine Journal says: The hemp buyers are offering $4 50 for the new crop, but find few sales, as the farmers want $5.

Seventy-five car loads of fat cattle were shipped East from Lexington last week. One dealer shipped 210 head of his own grazing.

Thirty years ago a man in Carter county hung himself upon a dogwood tree, and in the center of his grave a dogwood bush has grown up which is five inches in diameter and fifteen feet high.

The farmers of the Newstead neighborhood, Christian county, pooled their wheat crops and sold to the highest bidder. About 23,950 bushels were sold: the prices ranged from 66½ to 69½.

A man by the name of Yates, living near Upton station adopted a novel mode of stealing an old man's daughter on Saturday afternoon last. He drove up to the station with a spring wagon containing a very large chicken coop, when his intended bride entered the coop while Yates was arguing with the girl's father, who was opposed to the match. He then drove off with his precious bird in a cage, to the next station, and boarded the train with his prize, and the train pulled out just as the old man reached the station, having got wind of their movements and pursued them. As the train pulled out from the depot Yates waved his hat at his intended father-in-law, crying out to him that it was too late.—Bowling Green Times.

The Stanford Journal says: "Mr. [illegible] does not expire until March 4, 1889, the day on which Mr. Cleveland will complete his first term as President and Mr. Carlisle his [illegible] as Speaker of the House of Representatives. On the following day we hope and expect to see Mr. Cleveland sworn in for a second term as President and Mr. Carlisle take the oath of office as United States Senator. Four years later Mr. Cleveland's successor will be installed in the White House and we hope and believe that his name will be John G. Carlisle. Mr. Beck is old and rich, and he is getting older and richer every day. At the close of his present term he will be worth more than a million dollars and within less than three years of the allotted three-score and ten. There is not another round left in the ladder of his political ambition, and he has the expert testimony of a Jay Gould that every dollar over and above one million is but vanity and vexation of spirit. Give the young man a chance and the old man a rest."

TAKEN IN FOR GOOD.

Charles W. Henderson, the one-eyed sport, confidence man and alleged robber, was recaptured about three miles north of Lebanon yesterday morning. The capture was made by George W. Hunter, the widely known Marshal of Bardstown, assisted by J. W. Pulliam. Henderson reached Bardstown Wednesday afternoon, and it is an almost established fact that he was taken there by Charles Selvage, a city contractor, in the buggy of Major Ed Hughes, Chief of the Fire Department, and a known friend to Henderson. Hunter, who first won himself a deserved reputation as a shrewd and brave officer in the arrest of Grove Kennedy, heard of Henderson's appearance in the suburbs of Bardstown, and at once set to work on plans for his capture. He knew that he had a shrewd and dangerous man to deal with, but after hearing that he had been let out of the buggy by Selvage and had started south, he guessed that his plans were to walk down the railroad to some out-of-the-way station and there take a south-bound train. He took Pulliam with him and started in pursuit. He found by cautious inquiries along the way that the man was following the railroad and had stopped during the night at a farm house near the railroad. Hunter managed to get ahead of him, and he and Pulliam concealed themselves near the railroad a few miles this side of Lebanon. They did not have long to wait until Henderson appeared, walking rapidly along the ties around a curve and out of a cut in the road. Hunter, as usual with him, had the "drop," and when Henderson had nearly reached him rose, and covering him with a pistol, demanded his surrender. Pulliam was also ready for any attempt at resistance on Henderson's part, and seeing that escape was impossible and resistance useless, the sport quietly threw up his hands for the second time this week, and allowed himself searched and the "cuffs" put on. He was well armed and had $250 in money with him. He was led back to a station and last night Marshal Hunter arrived in Bardstown and lodged his prisoner in jail. He had already telegraphed the authorities at Shelbyville of Henderson's arrest, and was met at Bardstown by Marshal Buntain, who will take him to Shelbyville this morning.

Henderson talked but little after his arrest, but is said to have admitted to Marshal Hunter that he had been in hiding in this city two days after he was supposed to have left, and that he was taken to Bardstown by Charles Selvage in Major Hughes' buggy.

The excitement and indignation which has prevailed here since Henderson's first capture and escape was somewhat alleviated by the news of his arrest, and all seemed elated except the few who, claiming to be honest men, nevertheless aided the culprit in his escape, and expressed their satisfaction at it in an indirect but marked way. Many citizens feel that the city government has been outraged in the manner he was allowed to get away.

An examination of the bond upon which he was released from jail is almost damning proof of the ignorance or culpability of some one. The bond was made out by Magistrate McGrath on a regular Magistrate's blank. Where the prisoner and his surety say that they undertake to guarantee the prisoner's appearance in court, the singular pronoun, I, appears instead of "we". The blank for the amount of the bond was at first filled out, both in numerals and in writing, for $50, and appears to have been changed, the numerals being marked out and $250 inserted. The words "fifty dollars" have not been changed. The date which appears in three places is for the year 1885. The bond also reads: "I," [instead of we] "have admitted him to bail." Only one blank in the bond is properly filled out.

It has been given as an excuse for the Magistrate that they were told the charge only involved a little gambling scrape, but one of the best known laws of Kentucky is that $500 is the least bond allowed by the statutes when the prisoner is charged with grand larceny.—Louisville Commercial.

[illegible] this place only about [illegible] votes were cast for Congressman and [illegible] for H. Clay White, candidate for State Board of Supervisors of Tax.

L. M. WHITEHEAD,
J. C. MACK, Teachers.

Rev. C. M. Howard, the Virginia evangelist, is now conducting revival meetings at Union. He is a stranger in Kentucky, but has been preaching for twenty years in the Southern States, where he is well known and where his meetings have been most wonderfully successful. His usual plan is to hold union meetings allowing all professing their faith to join the church of their choice, and thousands have been brought into the churches at his meetings.

Last Saturday night Dudley Rouse heard a noise in his wareroom, which he construed to be something molesting a number of infant felines which were quartered there. Dudley rushed to the rescue of his pets, but beat a hasty retreat when he discovered that the intruder was a skunk of huge dimensions. Dudley decided that it was better to leave his skunkship in possession of the premises than to try to eject him and thereby disturb the entire town, and have his friends to evade his presence for an indefinite period.

A year or so ago the Hamilton school district and the Masonic lodge at that place combined and erected a commodious and neat two-story building, the lower story of which was used as a school-room, while the Masons occupied the second story, and last Saturday night about 10 o'clock the building and contents were destroyed by fire, supposed to be the work of an incendiary. We understand that the masons had their portion of the building insured, but that there was no insurance on the portion occupied as a school-house.

Elder Brown, of Harrison, Ohio, resumed his preaching at Bullitsville Christian Church, last night. He will continue the services for several nights, or at least as long as any interest is manifested. There have been about 20 additions.

The following have united with the church: John Clore, Kate Gorden, Henry Gorden and wife, A. S. Gaines, Ott Gaines, Jas. Clore, Dick Stephens, Robt. Sandford, Alice McMurray, Katie Walton, Sallie Acra, Lillie Davis, Emma Clore, Mollie Manning, Bettie Clore, Una Willis, and Mr. Hensley.

A few nights since Cy Crisler was aroused from his slumbers by his wife, who thought she heard some one on their back porch. Cy reached for his pistol, which was near at hand, and sat up in bed for some time, expecting every second that the person would approach the door, when he intended to open fire. Cy continued to await the signal for the beginning of the carnage, and the suspense finally became so great that with one nimble bound, Cy found himself at the door, which he threw open to discover only a calf devouring his wife's flowers. The calf still lives.

Owen Tanner, Charles Westbay and John Furlong went coon-hunting the other night, and, instead of a coon hunt, it turned out to be a prolonged home hunt. The boys got lost and ambled over all the hills and through all the briar patches and climbed all the staked and ridered fences within five miles of Burlington, before they succeeded in ascertaining their whereabouts. Next time they go coon-hunting they will station a man out on the Florence pike, and provide him with a horn, which he will be required to "toot" every three minutes, while they will be careful to keep within earshot of the horn.

The Methodist protracted meeting which commenced at this place last Wednesday night under the charge of Rev. Barker, who has control of this circuit, is developing great interest under the earnest efforts of the minister, large and increasing congregations attending every night and give undivided attention to the [illegible]. With Mrs. Dr. Grant and Miss Fannie Rice presiding at the two organs, Prof. Fogg with his cornet, and the [illegible] of vocalists, the music is simply grand and comes in for its share of praise. The meeting will continue for several days.

On the south-bound passenger of the short-line due at Walton about 2 o'clock p. m. Sunday, were two men between the mail and baggage cars stealing a ride. The train was running at the rate of 30 miles an hour, and when it rounded the last curve before reaching the depot at Walton the cars careened so that the men thought they were turning over, when they both jumped off, and were so badly mashed up that one of them died before morning and the other Monday. Two tramps happened to be on the road where the leap was made, and discovering the unfortunate men hastened to Walton and notified some of the citizens, who summoned Drs. Bagby and Duncan, and repaired to the scene where all that could be was done for the men. They were from some town in Ohio, one of them having come from Germany but a short time since. Those who saw them say they were horribly mangled.

LIMABURG.

Wednesday Oct. 27, at 2 o'clock, occurred the marriage of Miss Octavia, the charming daughter of S. J. Rouse, of Limaburg, to Mr. Everett Dixon, of Richwood. The bride was attired in a beautiful pale-blue silk. She wore no ornaments, save flowers. Their attendants were Miss Rosa Utz and Mr. W. Rice. Miss Utz was lovely in a handsome costume of marine blue cashmere. The gentlemen wore the conventional black. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. H. Keller, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. Mr. and Mrs Dixon have a host of friends, all of whom unite in wishing them a life of happiness. They were the recipients of many valuable and useful presents among which we noticed the following:

Charles Gorden, of Rising Sun, but last winter one of our county teachers, came to his death in a very mysterious manner a few weeks ago. His body was found in the Ohio river, and it has lately been ascertained almost beyond a doubt, that he was murdered. There is a slight clue to the parties to the foul deed.

Richard Stephens and wife visited friends at Bellevue Saturday and Sunday.

The potato crop in this section is about disposed of. The yield was much lighter than usual. George Craig's crop averaged 70 bbls. per acre, being the largest yield in East Bend. Rising Sun parties bought the principal part of potatoes, paying 40 cents per bushel.

THE COMBINATION
FENCE.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1847. It is now nearly [illegible] years since this medicine was offered as a [illegible] for Worms, and from that time its [illegible] steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Candies, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond all doubt that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are most constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and [illegible] relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to carefully examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. Schwartz & Haslett, Pittsburg, Pa.,
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family. Yours, &c.,

[illegible], Mo.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock's" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and effectual in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The course of the market has created but little ground for remark. Burley tobaccos from trash up to and including medium leaf are the lower, while the grades above medium quite retain the advance previously obtained. Dark and heavy types from common lugs to medium leaf, inclusive, are [illegible] lower and the grades above as well as the single grade of trash below are steady and unchanged. Good and fine grades and full types of both dark and Burley tobaccos have been fairly favorable to sellers. Reports are largely confirmatory of early opinions of the very high character of the crop, but there are rumors from the bluegrass and the Southern tier of counties that there is a larger admixture of off styles than had been anticipated. We quote 1886 tobaccos as follows for full weight packages:

Eight people in a log cabin near Flat Rock, Knox County were burned to death a few night ago. Wm. Poe, a farmer, went away from home on business, leaving his wife, five young children and two young ladies of the neighborhood, Miss Alice Carnes and Sallie Adams. During the night the house burned and all the inmates perished and their remains were found next day by the husband on his return. It is not know how the cabin caught fire, but the mother's remains were found clasping those of the baby, and the bed clothing near showed that an effort had been made to extinguish the fire. The remains of the others were found in the ruins.

An attempt was made early the other morning to rob the Farmers and Traders' Bank, Covington. Officer McGair, of the Merchants' Police, discovered two men loitering about the bank, and when they saw him they walked away in different directions. J. N. Mills, an influential citizen and merchant at a place called Pig Post-office, near Rocky Hill, was instantly killed while helping to unload a steam boiler from a wagon. He leaves a wife and several children.

The following has been issued by Vice President Milton H. Smith, of the Louisville & Nashville railroad: The management desires to call the attention of the lumber trade and the public generally to its proposed extensions through the Upper Cumberland river valley of Kentucky. The Cumberland Valley Branch will leave the Knoxville Division of the L. & N. R. R. at Corbin Station, Whitely County, Ky., 171 miles south of Louisville, run through Knox County to the Cumberland river at Barbourville, and from there up the valley of the Cumberland to Pineville, in Bell County. This much of the route has been put under contract, and it is expected the line will be opened for traffic not later than September, 1887. The lumber wealth of the Upper Cumberland Valley is conceded by all. It has lain undeveloped to the present time only from the lack of transportation facilities. Special attention is directed to both the quality and quantity of the poplar, walnut, cherry and oak to be found there. Desirable sites for the erection of mills and lumber booms will be found at different points on the proposed road, and this company will follow its usual liberal course in aiding the development of industries along its lines. The road will be extended beyond Pineville to the Virginia or Tennessee line, opening up extensive fields of valuable steam and coking coals immediately on the line. Inquiries from parties desiring to investigate the resources of this region, with a view to development, will receive prompt attention."

The hands employed in the work on the New Huntington railroad bridge over the Licking, Newport, struck a few days ago for an additional twenty-five cents a day. They have been getting $1.25 heretofore. Their demand was acceded to, and work is now going on as though nothing had happened.

THE ACTUAL FACTS.

A Comparison of the Net National Expenditures Under Republican and Partially Democratic Control of the Government.

In a late speech Senator F. M. Cockrell, of Missouri, gave the following conclusive statistics regarding the National administration of public affairs under the different parties:

The Republican party assumed the control of National affairs on March 4, 1861, and remained in control of both the legislative and executive branches up to March 4, 1875, the end of the Forty-third Congress. The House of Representatives has been Democratic since March 4, 1875, during the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, and was Republican during the Forty-seventh Congress. The Senate has been Republican except during the Forty-sixth Congress, when the Democrats had a small majority. The executive branch passed into Democratic hands on March 4, 1885. The Forty-first, Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, from March 4, 1869, to March 4, 1875, six years, being Republican in both the House and Senate, made the appropriations for the expenditures of the six fiscal years 1871 to 1876 inclusive. The Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, from March 4, 1875, to March 4, 1881, six years, with a Democratic House and Republican Senate except in the Forty-sixth Congress, made appropriations for the expenditures for the six fiscal years 1877 to 1882, inclusive. The Forty-seventh Congress, Republican in both branches, made the appropriations for the expenditures in the fiscal years 1883 and 1884. The Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, from March 4, 1883, to March 4, 1887, Democratic in the House and Republican in the Senate, made the appropriations for the fiscal years 1885, 1886 and 1887.

In the comparisons I shall give I shall state the figures from the final official records made in the Treasury Department about the last of August after the close of the preceding fiscal year, and after all the expenditures for each fiscal year have been audited and determined, being the final record of net ordinary expenditures for each year.

The net ordinary expenditures for the six fiscal years 1871 to 1876 during full Republican control amounted to the sum of $[illegible], and for the six fiscal years 1877 to 1882, with a Democratic House, amounted to $[illegible], thus showing a reduction by a Democratic House of $151,817,935.39, or an annual saving of $25,302,989.23 1-6, including the expenditures for pensions and interest on the public debt during the two periods, and we still have a total saved by a Democratic House in six years of $126,818,233.28, or an annual saving of $21,136,372.21⅓. What were the items of these large reductions or savings? The record shows them to be as follows: In civil and miscellaneous expenditures, $51,944,522.38; in War Department, $41,181,883.73; in Navy Department, $40,8[illegible].27; in Indian service, $6,175,346.91; in premiums on loans and purchase of bonds, $18,619,485.84; in interest on the public debt, $103,844,868.79. These items show an aggregate saving of $230,653,101.07 in six years under a Democratic House. In what item of expenditure was there an excess sufficient to reduce this sum to $151,817,935.39? The excess of expenditures for pensions to our country's wounded and disabled heroes and their widows and orphans during these six years of Democratic supremacy in the House over the expenditures for the same objects during the six preceding years of Republican control was $78,315,150.68, the exact sum making the reduction. Now compare the same expenditures for the fiscal years 1883 and 1884 under a Republican Congress with those for the fiscal years 1881 and 1882 under a Democratic House and we find that the expenditures were for 1883 and 1884 $509,534,381.87, and exclusive of pensions and interest on the public debt were $274,354,070.14, and were for 1881 and 1882 $518,694,327.16, and exclusive of pensions and interest on the public debt were $253,703,905.62, thus showing an apparent reduction in 1883 and 1884 over 1881 and 1882 in total expenditures of $9,159,945.29, but an actual excess of expenditures, excluding pensions and interest on the public debt of $20,650,164.52, not considering the fact that there was no appropriation for rivers and harbors for the year 1884.

Now compare such expenditures for 1883 and 1884 under a Republican Congress with those for the fiscal years 1885 and 1886 under a Democratic House again, and we have for 1883 and 1884 $509,534,381.87, and excluding pensions and interest $274,354,070.14, and for 1885 and 1886 $502,710,073.61, and, excluding pensions and interest, $281,236,539.65, thus showing an apparent saving in 1885 and 1886 in total expenditures of $6,824,308.26; but excluding pensions and interest, an excess of $6,882,469.21, which was caused largely by appropriations in 1885 for deficiencies not provided for in 1884. The Republican press and leaders have made a great clamor over the alleged and pretended extravagance of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1887, made by the present Democratic House of the Forty-ninth Congress at the last session, and have attempted to make the impression upon the people that the present Democratic Administration was extravagant and wasteful. We can never know what the net ordinary expenditures for any fiscal year may be until the expenditures have actually been made, the year ended and the books in the treasury closed. The expenditures may be more or less than the appropriations, and, if more, the deficiencies will, during the ensuing session, be provided for. Therefore, at this period in the fiscal year 1887, we can only take the appropriations already made, as a basis for comparison. Now, compare the ordinary expenditures for the fiscal year 1884 under a Republican Congress with the appropriations made at the last session for the present fiscal year 1887. The aggregate appropriations for 1887 are $264,783,579.59 for all objects and purposes. Now, deduct from this aggregate the several appropriations not incident to the necessary operations of the Government and not made in 1884 and not ordinary in their character, as follows for paying Alabama awards $5,769,015.8. For a new navy, $1,5 0,000; excess of pensions over 1884, $20,645,971.94; for rivers and harbors, not appropriated for in 1884, $14,473,000. Now, deduct these sums, amounting to $44,388,887.22, from the total appropriations and we have $220,394,632.37. Deduct the same from the net ordinary expenditures of 1884, which were $244,126,244.33, and we have the sum of $23,731,551.96 as the saving or reduction by the appropriations for 1887 over 1884. This clearly shows the falsity of the Republican clamor and the actual economy of the present Administration. In this calculation no account has been taken of the interest on the public debt, which is gradually being reduced, and will be less this year than in 1884. Making proper reductions for the decreased interest, and we will still have a saving of near $30,000,000. Thus the records show a reduction, a saving in the ordinary expenditures of the Government in the enormous sum of over $170,000,000 by the Democratic House of Representatives, and establish the Democratic principle "economy in the public expense that labor may be lightly burdened."

A BLIND PARTISAN.

No One So Blind as He Who Will Not See—Sherman's Statement That the Democratic Administration Has Paralyzed Business.

Senator Sherman is an example of the extremes to which partisan rancor will lead a man of abundant experience in public affairs. Forty years of public life should equip him with judgment capable of discerning the drift of popular sentiment, and the new condition of things which has come about in this country. Such an experience should also have taught him the folly of making such an assertion as that uttered at Portsmouth, in his own State, when he stated that distrust and want of confidence on the part of every business man, farmer and laborer, followed the election of President Cleveland. To this monstrous statement he added another equally devoid of truth, that the election of a Democratic President produced a steady fall of prices, and the deterioration of industries which were once flourishing. Of all issues that could be manufactured by a Republican orator, this is the most ridiculous. That of the bloody shirt is sensible in comparison. At a time when the entire land is reverberating with the din of awakened industry, when from all sides comes the welcome intelligence of a business revival, such as the country has not experienced for years, when manufacturers and traders are at their wit's end to supply the demand upon them, when the signs of prosperity are daily multiplying, such an assertion as that made by Senator Sherman at a public meeting can only be regarded as the climax of stupidity.

Of course, it can not be imagined for a moment that he believed what he so gravely announced to his hearers, for he is too sagacious and clear-sighted in all that relates to the general business of the country not to recognize the real state of affairs. If he desired to deceive his hearers for a partisan purpose, which is the other horn of the dilemma in which he voluntarily placed himself, a man of his ability and experience should know better than to attempt deception on a subject which was as well known to every man in the audience as to him. The revival of business was looked for too long not to be felt in every part of the country when it arrived. Senator Sherman should remember that predictions which did service before the election of a Democratic President, of disasters and outrages as the result of such an election, are calculated to do more injury than benefit to the Republican party at the present time.

The people of the country have before them the record of eighteen months of Democratic Administration at Washington. It is a record of the most unassailable kind. Every pledge has been scrupulously kept, every promise fulfilled. The Government is conducted with less expense, leaks are stopped, honesty and economy enforced and the business community encouraged. The efforts of the Administration were directed towards the revival of business confidence. How successful they have been the entire country can testify. The disastrous depression which hung so long over the land, paralyzing its industries and enterprises, has been removed and the sun of prosperity is shining in an unclouded sky. What folly, then, for Senator Sherman to insist on the old, exploded falsehood that a Democratic Administration is fatal to business. There was a time when, like Wiggins, he might have found persons foolish enough to believe in his wild predictions. That time has passed and the American people can never be fooled again by Republican lies. Senator Sherman's inventive powers in political harangues are poor, indeed, when he has to resort to such ridiculous statements as that Democratic Government is injurious to business.—Albany Argus.

THE PARTY OF MORALITY.

Attitude of the Republicans Toward the Champion of the Spoils Policy in 1884 and Their Virtuous Indignation Over Present Democratic Abuses.

In 1884 "the party of moral ideas" appealed for popular support on the ground that it was the only party which could be trusted to enforce Civil-Service reform. In order that no doubt might be left as to the attitude on this question which Mr. Blaine occupied, he proceeded to give the country an object-lesson as to the relation which members of the civil service should hold towards party politics. He started from his home on a long electioneering tour, which consumed several weeks and carried him over a large part of the country. He took with him on this long tour, as political attendant, to render him all manner of personal service, the postmaster of Augusta, who was paid a large salary by taxes raised from the people of both parties for discharging the duties of that office. He called to his aid the United States District Attorney for the Eastern district of New York, and the occupant of that judicial branch of the Federal Government abandoned his post to deliver a series of stump speeches, in which he virulently assailed the man who was then likely soon to be, and who shortly after really was, his official superior as head of the Government. He commended the zeal of the Commissioner of Pensions—a man who had been appointed by Garfield three years before solely on the ground of partisan service in the campaign of 1880—when this Commissioner left a bureau in which the work was shamefully behindhand, and devoted weeks which he owed to the public service to the management of the Republican campaign in Ohio, then an "October State."

Not only did Mr. Blaine thus prostitute the civil service of the whole people to the advantage of one political party, but it was notorious that such partisan abuse of official position was the surest road to his favor should he become President. The conduct of Postmaster Manley, District Attorney Tenney and Pension Commissioner Dudley in the fall of 1884 should have insured their prompt dismissal, yet every body knew that they not only incurred no danger of that just penalty in case of Mr. Blaine's election, but, on the contrary, were taking the best course to secure their promotion to higher positions. Moreover, it was made known to all Federal officials that it was at the risk of losing their places in case of Republican success that they refused to do any partisan service required of them, and it was notorious that a black list was made of clerks at Washington who failed to display proper activity in the campaign and who were to be decapitated as soon as Mr. Blaine came in.

In the autumn of 1886 it seems almost incredible that in the autumn of 1884 a great political party presented a candidate for the Presidency who made such open proclamation of his contempt for Civil-Service reform and of his purpose to "have no nonsense" about his Administration in case of his election. If Federal officials under a Democratic President were to be guilty of such shameless abuse of official trust now, the Administration could not stand up for a day under the volume of just criticism which the misconduct would provoke. Yet two years ago no Republican organ raised even a faint protest against Mr. Blaine's conduct.

That even the mildest abuse of power by a Federal official is now visited with public censure constitutes the surest proof that reform ideas have made wonderful progress. But the Republican newspapers which kept silence under the performances of their own party and their own candidate two years ago show a rare quality of impudence in their criticisms upon Democratic officials under Mr. Cleveland for less flagrant offenses now. The people have a keen scent for hypocrisy, and they rate at its proper value the present virtuous attitude on the question of interference in politics by Federal officials of Republican organs which sustained the champion of the spoils policy in 1884 and are now clamoring for his renomination as the best exponent of their party in 1888.—N. Y. Post.

NEWSPAPER PICKINGS.

——The man who puts his finger on James G. Blaine and finds him there during the next two years is going to be a very smart person. Blaine is a smart man himself.—Chicago Herald.

——The rumor that Mahone will retire from politics with the expiration of his term in the United States Senate is doubtless unfounded. Though shorn of political power, the renegade will, in all probability, remain in the arena until after the November election of 1887, when a new Legislature is to be chosen. He will make a desperate effort to carry the Legislature and have himself elected to the Senate to succeed Riddleberger. After his defeat then Mahone will bid farewell to all his ambitious schemes.—Richmond State.

——The Tribune publishes a "scathing review" of General Black, the Commissioner of Pensions, by Colonel Dudley, his predecessor. Colonel Dudley complains that the office as now conducted is "very little else than a political machine." Colonel Dudley, it will be remembered, is the man who forced President Garfield to discharge a most efficient Commissioner in order to give him the place, because he had carried Indiana for the Republicans in 1880, and who distinguished himself in the campaign of 1884 by abandoning his official duties to "run" the Republican canvass in Ohio.—N. Y. Post.

——It was the distinguished unfitness of the nominee of the Republican party for the Presidency in 1884 that detracted from his standard thousands of conservative Republicans, and it was the peculiar fitness of the Democratic nominee that brought the honorable dissidents straight into his camp. That the same two men are to head the National armies in 1888 is a conclusion already reached, and with this view the lines are already drawn in Massachusetts, and the Democrats have put at their head one of the young men of 1884 who bolted from Blaine and supported Cleveland on the express ground of personal fitness to establish a pure Administration.—N. O. Picayune.

DANGEROUS DRUGS.

How to Control Effectually All Such Horrible Habits.

Rochester, N. Y., Post Express.

A gentleman who has spent the summer abroad, said to our reporter, that the thing that impressed him most of all was the number of holidays one encounters abroad and the little anxiety the people display in the conduct of business affairs. "Men boast here," he said, "that they work for years without a day off. In Europe that would be considered a crime."

Mr. H. H. Warner, who was present at the time, said: "This is the first summer in years that I have not spent on the water, [illegible]."

"Then, I suppose you have been advertising extensively?"

"Not at all. We have always heretofore closed our laboratory during July, August and September, but this summer we have kept it running day and night to supply the demand, which has been three times greater than ever before in our history of this season."

"How do you account for this?"

"The increase has come from the universal recognition of the excellence of our preparations. We have been nearly ten years before the public and the sales are constantly increasing while our newspaper advertising is constantly diminishing. Why, high scientific and medical authorities now publicly concede that our Warner's safe cure is the only scientific specific for kidney and liver disease and for all the many diseases caused by them."

"Have you evidence of this?"

"Abundance! Only a few weeks ago Dr. J. L. Stephens, of Lebanon, Ohio, a specialist for the cure of narcotic, etc. habits told me that a number of eminent scientific medical men had been experimenting for years, testing and analyzing all known remedies for the kidneys and liver, for, as you may be aware, the excessive use of all narcotics and stimulants destroys those organs, and until they can be restored to health the habits can not be broken up! Among the investigators were such men as J. M. Hull, M. D., President of the State Board of Health of Iowa, and Alexander Neil, M. D., Professor of Surgery in the College of Physicians and Surgeons and president of the Academy of Medicine at Columbus, who, after exhaustive inquiry, reported that there was no remedy known to schools or to scientific inquiry equal to Warner's safe cure!"

"Are many persons addicted to the use of deadly drugs?"

"There are forty millions of people in the world who use opium alone, and there are many hundreds of thousands in this country who are victims of morphine, opium, quinine and cocaine. They think they have no such habit about them—so many people are unconscious victims of these habits. They have pains and symptoms of what they call malaria and other diseases, when in reality it is the demand in the system for these terrible drugs, a demand that is caused largely by physicians' prescriptions which contain so many dangerous drugs, and strong spirits, and one that must be answered or silenced in the kidneys and liver by what Dr. Stephens says is the only kidney and liver specific. He also says that moderate opium and other drug eaters, if they sustain the kidney and liver vigor with that great remedy, can keep up these habits in moderation."

"Well does not this discovery give you a new revelation of the power of safe cure."

"No, sir; for years I have tried to convince the public that nearly all the diseases of the human system originate in some disorder of the kidneys or liver, and hence I have logically declared that if our specific were used, over ninety per cent. of these ailments would disappear. The liver and kidneys seem to absorb these poisons from the blood and become depraved and diseased."

"When these eminent authorities thus publicly admit that there is no remedy like ours to enable the kidneys and liver to throw off the frightful effects of all deadly drugs and excessive use of stimulants it is an admission of its power as great as any one could desire; for if through its influence alone the opium, morphine, quinine, cocaine and liquor habits can be overcome, what higher testimonial of its specific power could be asked for?"

"You really believe then, Mr. Warner, that the majority of diseases come from kidney and liver complaints?"

"I do! When you see a person moping and groveling about, half dead and half alive, year after year, you may surely put him down as having some kidney and liver trouble."

"The other day I was talking with Dr. Fowler, the eminent oculist of this city, who said that half the patients who came to him for eye treatment were affected by advanced kidney disease. Now many people wonder why in middle life their eye sight becomes so poor. A thorough course of treatment with Warner's safe cure is what they need more than a pair of eye glasses. The kidney poison in the blood always attacks the weakest part of the body; with some it affects the eyes; with others the head; with others the stomach or the lungs, or rheumatic disorder follows and neuralgia tears them to pieces, or they lose the powers of taste, smell or become impotent in other functions of the body. What man would not give his all to have the vigor of youth at command!"

"The intelligent physician knows that these complaints are but symptoms; they are not the disorder, and they are symptoms not of disease of the head, the eye or stomach, or of virility, necessarily, but of the kidney poison in the blood and they may prevail and no pain occur in the kidneys."

It is not strange that the enthusiasm which Mr. Warner displays in his appreciation of his own remedy, which restored him to health when the doctors said he could not live six months, should become infectious and that the entire world should pay tribute to its power. For as Mr. Warner says, the sales are constantly increasing, while the newspaper advertising is constantly diminishing. This speaks volumes in praise of the extraordinary merits of his preparations.

Catarrh

Is a complaint which affects nearly everybody, more or less. It originates in impure blood, and is aggravated by taking cold. Disagreeable flow from the nose, tickling in the throat, offensive breath, pain over and between the eyes, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, are the more common symptoms. Catarrh is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which strikes directly at the cause by removing all impurities from the blood.

"I had catarrh nine years, and suffered terribly with it. Soon after I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla the catarrh troubled me less, and after taking three bottles I was entirely cured." Jane Hiney, Lumberton, Clinton County, Ohio.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and think it has done me a great deal of good. I recommend it to all within my reach. Hood's Sarsaparilla has been worth every thing to me." Luther D. Robbins, East Thompson, Ct.

A GREAT ENTERPRISE.

The Century Magazine, with its enormous circulation (edition of November number is a quarter of a million) and great resources, has never undertaken a greater work than the one which will be its important feature during the coming year. This is a history of our own country in its most critical time, as set forth in

THE LIFE OF LINCOLN,

BY HIS CONFIDENTIAL SECRETARIES, JOHN G. NICOLAY AND COL. JOHN HAY.

This great work, begun with the sanction of President Lincoln, and continued under the authority of his son, the Hon. Robt. T. Lincoln, is the only full and authoritative record of the life of Abraham Lincoln. Its authors were friends of Lincoln before his presidency; they were most intimately associated with him as private secretaries throughout his term of office, and to them were transferred upon Lincoln's death all his private papers. Here will be told the inside history of the civil war and of President Lincoln's administration,—important details of which have hitherto remained unrevealed, that they might first appear in this authentic history. By reason of the publication of this work, which has been followed with unflagging interest by a great audience, will occupy less space during the coming year, but will by no means be entirely omitted. Stories of naval engagements, prison life, etc., will appear.

THE WAR SERIES,

NOVELS AND STORIES

include a novel by Frank R. Stockton, two novelettes by George W. Cable, stories by Mary Hallock Foote, "Uncle Remus," Edward Eggleston, and other American authors.

SPECIAL FEATURES

(with illustrations) include a series of articles on affairs in Russia and Siberia, by George Kennan, author of "Tent Life in Siberia," who has just returned from a most eventful visit to Siberian prisons; papers on the Labor Problem; English Cathedrals; Dr. Eggleston's Religious Life in the American Colonies; Men and Women of Queen Anne's Reign, by Mrs. Oliphant; Clairvoyance, Spiritualism, Astrology, etc.; Astronomical papers; articles on Bible History, etc.

THE ELECTIONS.

Nearly All the States of the Union Vote.

Texas Leads the Democratic Column With 100,000 Plurality.

Ohio Remains Republican—Hewitt Elected Mayor of New York by a Handsome Democratic Majority—"Brother Bob" Elected Governor of Tennessee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3.—There is the greatest interest centered in Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, and until these States give more definite reports a tabulated statement of the political complexion of the next House of Representatives will be subject to many changes. The Democratic estimate is as follows:

STATES.	Rep.	Dem.	STATES.	Rep.	Dem.
Alabama		8	Missouri		14
Arkansas		5	Minnesota	2	3
California	6		Nebraska	2	1
Colorado	1		Nevada	1
Connecticut	1	3	New Hampshire	1	1
Delaware		1	New Jersey	5	2

Kansas	7		S. Carolina		7
Kentucky	3	8	Tennessee	2	8
Louisiana		6	Texas		11
Maine	4		Vermont	2
Maryland	1	5	*Virginia	5	5
Massachusetts	8	4	W. Virginia	1	3
New York	19	15	Wisconsin	8	1
Michigan	6	5
Mississippi		7	Total	151	173

*Labor 1.

Recapitulation—Democrats, 173; Republicans, 151; Labor 1. This would give the Democrats a majority of 21 over all. In the present House of Representatives the Democrats have a majority of 45. According to the foregoing table there is a Democratic loss of 23. On the other hand, the Republicans figure closer. The best estimate the Republicans make in the light of data is as follows:

STATES.	Dem.	Rep.	STATES.	Dem.	Rep.
Alabama	8		Missouri	12	2
Arkansas	5		Minnesota	2	3
California		6	Nebraska	1	2
Colorado		1	Nevada		1

Massachusetts	4	8	W. Virginia	2	2
New York	14	20	Wisconsin	1	8
Michigan	4	7
Mississippi	7		Total	170	154

*Labor 1.

Recapitulation: Democrats, 170; Republicans, 154; Labor, 1; Democratic majority, 15. The election will not effect any change in the United States Senate if Indiana has chosen a Republican Legislature.

OHIO.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 3.—According to the latest returns received here there are only two Congressional districts in the State that may be classed as doubtful. These are the Seventh and Fifteenth. In the Seventh Campbell, the Democratic nominee, has an unofficial majority of 81. In the Fifteenth Monroe County has not been heard from. The majority of Grosvenor, the Republican candidate, outside of Monroe County, is 3,665. If Monroe County should give Warner a majority exceeding this he would be elected, but it is not likely that the Democratic majority in this county will go above 3,000. Boothman, Republican, in the Sixth District, has an unofficial majority over Hill of 1,342. Following is a list of the successful candidates, giving Campbell the Seventh District and Grosvenor the Fifteenth:

Republicans—First, Butterworth; Second, Brown; Third, Williams; Sixth, Boothman; Eighth, Kennedy; Ninth, Cooper; Tenth, Romeis; Eleventh, Thompson; Twelfth, Pugsley; Fourteenth, Wickham; Fifteenth, Grosvenor; Seventeenth, J. D. Taylor; Eighteenth, McKinley; Nineteenth, Ezra B. Taylor; Twentieth, Crouse.

Democrats—Fourth, Yoder; Fifth, Seney; Seventh, Campbell; Thirteenth, Outhwaite; Sixteenth, Wilkins; Twenty-first, Foran.

Kennedy's unofficial majority is 1,336, Pugsley's 1,430, and Crouse's about 1,000. The Ohio delegation in the present Congress includes 11 Democrats and 10 Republicans, while the above showing gives 15 Republicans and 6 Democrats.

The making of estimates on the State ticket has practically ceased. Both headquarters of the State Committees have closed, and the chairmen are out of the city. They are receiving no news and are making no estimates on the State ticket. A close estimate of the Republican majority places it at between 15,000 and 17,000, although official returns may go below 15,000 or above 17,000.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 3.—The entire Republican ticket is elected in Hamilton County, the majorities ranging from 9,000 down to 2,000. Harry W. Bishop, Democratic candidate for sheriff was beaten by 9,313. Several county precincts are to hear from—they gave Hondly about 500 majority. The Prohibition vote for Smith, Secretary of State, was 441.

INDIANA.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 3.—Upon the basis of the returns from 748 precincts, 45 per cent of the vote of the State, the Republican ticket has been elected by a plurality of 5,275. Ex-Senator McDonald, a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, says, however, the returns from the other 55 per cent of the precincts will result in placing the State again in the Democratic column. He basis his claim upon the experience of 1884, when the bulletins for two days after the election indicated the success of the Republican ticket.

The Republican State Central Committee and Senator Harrison claim the election of the State ticket by at least 3,000 plurality, but are not disposed to limit the figures. Both committees are claiming the Legislature, and until the official returns are received the result will be in doubt. The probabilities favor the Republicans. Upon the authority of private advices they claim 77 members sure, while the Democrats claim only 73 with certainty. Both have in reserve a number of what are called doubtful districts to increase their totals. The Democrats, at the outside, do not insist on more than two majority. The Congressional delegation will probably stand seven Republicans and six Democrats—a Republican gain of three.

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 3.—The city and State have been in a fever of excitement all day over the close and doubtful election results. The receipt of the announcement of John G. Carlisle's defeat was a great surprise. Expressions of regret and sorrow were heard from every side that the Speaker's district had not returned him to Congress. Some even went so far as to say they had rather lose every district in the State than John G. Carlisle. A Courier-Journal special at 6 o'clock, stating that later returns would elect Carlisle by about 800 majority, was received with great cheering, and there is yet a cherished hope that Carlisle is elected.

In this (Louisville) district there was a disaffection in the party. Twenty-five per cent of the registered Democratic voters stayed away from the polls, and it is asserted that many of Willis' friends worked and voted for the Republican nominee. The full returns are in to-night and the Supervisor's count gives the Democratic candidate 40 majority. The Courier-Journal's figures make his majority 193.

The Courier-Journal's specials indicate the election of the following Congressional delegation, though the full returns are not in, and it may require the official vote to determine the result in the Sixth, Ninth and Tenth Districts:

First District, Wm. J. Stone, Dem.; Second, Polk LaFoon, Dem.; Third, G. W. Hunter, Rep.; Fourth, A. V. Montgomery, Dem.; Fifth, Asher G. Caruth, Dem.; Sixth, J. G. Carlisle, Dem.; Seventh, W. C. P. Breckenridge, Dem.; Ninth, G. M. Thomas, Rep.; Tenth, W. P. Taulbee, Dem.; Eleventh, H. G. Finley, Rep. Hunter's majority in the Third District is about 1,000; Caruth's in the Fifth, 40; John G. Carlisle's in the Sixth, about 800; in the Ninth, Thomas S.'s majority 183; in the Eleventh, Finley's majority about 1,000. The result shows a Republican gain of at least two Congressmen in the State. It is asserted here that the Protectionists sent money in the Sixth District to defeat Carlisle.

WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, Nov. 3.—Goff's majority in Ohio County is 88. His majority in the district will probably be from 800 to 1,000. The members elected to the Legislature from Ohio County are Whittaker, Rep.; Woods, Harden and Hiesens, Dems. The vote is very close in the Second and Third Congressional Districts, with a small chance for Finch and Brown, Reps. Hogg, Dem., is elected in Fourth District. The Democratic Legislative losses will materially reduce the Democratic majority in total ballot.

ALABAMA.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Nov. 2.—The weather was clear and voting light. There was no opposition to Herbert (Dem.) in the Second District. Jones (Dem.), of the Mobile District, and Oates (Dem.), of the Third, were also without opposition. The contests in the other five districts were not formidable, unless in the Fourth, represented by Davidson (Dem.), and candidate for re-election, the indications are all favorable to a solid Democratic delegation.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Nov. 2.—Partial returns from the Sixth Congressional District indicate the election of Bankhead, Democrat, by a reduced majority. General Joe Wheeler is elected in the Eighth.

ARKANSAS.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 2.—Partial returns from all over this State render certain the election of Democratic candidates in each of the five Congressional districts. The vote was very small everywhere, little interest being taken in the result.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 2.—The partial returns from all the counties in the State outside of San Francisco County give the Republicans a majority. Unless the majority for Bartlett (Dem.), for Governor proves to be much larger in San Francisco than is expected Swift (Rep.), will be elected. The American vote, which started out strong, rapidly fell away, and in the interior it fell behind the O'Donnell (Ind.) vote. Returns of the legislative ticket so far received are not sufficiently ample to say how it has gone, but reports indicate a Republican majority. Scratching has been so heavy all over the State that the returns will come in slowly.

COLORADO.

DENVER, Nov. 2.—It is impossible to give any thing reliable as to the result, except that the vote is very close between Myers, Republican candidate for Governor, and Adams, Democrat, and Symes, representative to Congress, Republican, and Reed, Democrat. The Republican State Committee claim the State by 3,000, while the Democrats say they will have it by 2,000. The votes polled was light in Denver, 1,500 less than in 1884.

CONNECTICUT.

HARTFORD, CONN., Nov. 2.—There is apparently no election of Governor by the people. The Legislature is probably Republican by 20 to 30 majority, thus insuring the re-election of Hawley to the Senate, and the election of the State ticket.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 2.—The Legislature stands: Republicans, 57; Democrats, 46. Vance, Republican, is elected in the First Congressional District.

FLORIDA.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 2.—Returns show Democratic gains in the First and Second Congressional Districts. Present Congressmen Davidson and Dougherty will be re-elected by majorities from 1,200 to 3,500.

JACKSONVILLE, Nov. 2.—R. H. M. Davidson, in the First District, and Chas. Dougherty, in the Second District, Democrats, are re-elected. The new constitution is carried by a heavy majority.

GEORGIA.

ATLANTA, Nov. 2.—Specials to the Constitution from all of the Georgia districts show the election of the entire Democratic Congressional delegation as follows: T. M. Norwood, H. G. Turner, C. F. Crisp, L. W. Grimes, John D. Stewart, J. H. Blount, J. C. Clements, H. H. Carlton, A. D. Candler and George T. Barnes. There was no opposition to the Democratic nominees except in the Fourth District, which is merely nominal, and in the Seventh District, which has recently sprang up.

ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—The Republican majority in Chicago for State Treasurer is estimated, at midnight, at 9,000, and the Republicans claim a majority in the State for Treasurer of from 20,000 to 25,000. The majority for the Republican county ticket in Cook County, except for Judges, will range from 3,000 to 8,000.

The Republicans gain a Congressman in the Third District, but no returns have been received from any of the outside Congressional Districts up to midnight to warrant any prediction as to the result. Great interest centers in the Tenth, Eleventh, Thirteenth and Eighteenth Districts, all of which are regarded as fighting ground by both parties. Lawler has been elected in the Second District by about 400 majority.

IOWA.

DES MOINES, Nov. 2.—Returns from Iowa will be compared with the vote of last year, and with the majority of Larrabee, Republican, for Governor, over Whiting, which was 7,003. There are 1,800 precincts in the State.

BURLINGTON, Nov. 2—11 p. m.—The present indications are that General Gear is elected to Congress by 400 majority over Hall.

KANSAS.

TOPEKA, Nov. 2.—The weather has been fine and a large vote was polled. There seems to have been much scratching of tickets throughout the State. It is not probable that any definite results will be known until late to-night, and quite likely not until to-morrow. This is especially the case in the Fifth Congressional District, where Anderson, the present incumbent, is running independently.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Nov. 2.—Estimated returns from this city give Moonlight, Dem., for Governor, 1,000 majority. The entire Democratic ticket is elected. Congressman Morrill, Rep., will receive a good majority.

LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 2.—The election throughout the State as far as heard from passed off quietly. Wilkinson, Dem., has almost a walk-over in the First District, but few Republican votes being cast. The vote in this city has been light. In the country parishes of the Second District, Hero, Rep., is reported to have polled the full vote, except a small vote diverted by Simms in St. James. In the Third District meager reports received indicate a fair vote polled. Throughout the balance of the State there being no opposition to the Democrats, only a small vote was polled, electing the following to Congress: Fourth District, N. C. Blanchard; Fifth, Cherubusco Newton; Sixth, E. W. Robertson.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—The canvass of the vote in this city has been completed. In the Third Congressional District, Rusk, Democrat, received 13,286 votes; Bosse, Industrial, indorsed by Republicans, 3,3 5; Glass, Prohibitionist, 1,704. Rusk's majority over all, 7,277; over Bosse, 9,971.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—The returns received from the districts out of the city indicate the election of Charles H. Gibson, Democrat, in the First District; Dr. Frank T. Shaw, Democrat, in the Second; Barnes Compton, Democrat, in the Fifth, and Louis E. McComas, Republican, in the Sixth. This will leave the Maryland delegation the same as in the present Congress, and except in the city of Baltimore all the members are re-elected. The re-election of Mr. McComas will be by a reduced majority.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—A Worcester special reports: John E. Russell, Dem., elected to Congress in the Tenth district over W. W. Rice, Rep.; Patrick A. Collins, Dem., elected to Congress in the Fourth district; Lodge, Rep., undoubtedly elected in the Sixth district over Lovering. In the Ninth district the vote for Ely, Rep., and Burnett, Dem., is close, and the result is uncertain.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The total vote of this city gives Andrews, Dem., 26,709; Ames, Rep., 18,3 3.

MICHIGAN.

DETROIT, Nov. 2.—Two years ago Alger, Republican, had a plurality of 3,800 over Begole for Governor. Returns so far received show slight Republican gains. In the First, Seventh and Eighth Districts the Fusion candidates are slightly ahead of their tickets. For Governor a continuation of the gains so far reported would give a Republican plurality of between 5,000 and 6,000.

MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 2.—Returns up to 11 p. m. from 41 precincts, give McGill, Rep., for Governor, 2,878; Ames, Rep., 2,400. This ratio of returns would indicate McGill's election by about 3,000 majority. The Democrats are claiming the State by 12,000 majority, and the following majorities are Congressmen: Wilson, in the First District, 700; McDonald, in the Third District, 500; Rice, in the Fourth, 1,500. The Republicans claim the State by 10,000 majority, and the election of all the Congressmen, with the possible exception of Herbert in the Third.

MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 2.—Chairman Shields, of the Democratic State Central Committee, said at midnight that he felt confident the Democrats had carried 12 of the 14 Congressional districts in the State, and possibly more than that number, although he conceded the fact that four districts, the Fifth, Ninth, Tenth and Thirteenth, were very close, with the outlook favorable to the Republicans in the Ninth and Thirteenth. Other members of the committee were more hopeful and claimed a solid delegation. The Republican (Dem.) concedes the defeat of Glover in the Ninth District, and claims the election of Phillips in the Fifth and Craven in the Thirteenth. Returns on State and Legislative tickets are of meager description. It may be safely stated, however, that the Democrat's State ticket will be elected by about the usual majority, and that the Democrats will have a majority in the Legislature.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Eighty-six counties in New Hampshire, Rep., 1445; Ingersoll, Dem., [illegible]; Woolworth, Prohibitionist, [illegible]; Democratic gain 334.

NEW JERSEY.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 2.—The indications are that the Republicans will retain control of both branches of the Legislature. The majority of Robert S. Green, the Democratic candidate for Governor, is estimated at from 8,000 to 8,500. The Republican State Committee are very hopeful that Howey will be elected. His gains are very great. Phelps, Rep., for Congress, in the Fifth District, has been elected.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Returns from all except one election district give Roosevelt [illegible]; Hewitt, 90,[illegible]; George, 67,[illegible]; Wardwell, 7[illegible]. The united Democratic ticket was elected in this city by 30,000 majority.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Congressional delegation of New York State is probably as follows: First District, Perry Belmont, Dem.; Second, Felix Campbell, Dem.; Third, S. V. White, Rep.; Fourth, P. P. Mahoney, Dem.; Fifth, A. M. Bliss, Dem.; Sixth, A. J. Cummings, Dem.; Seventh, Lloyd Bryce, Dem.; Eighth, T. J. Campbell, Dem.; Ninth, S. S. Cox, Dem.; Tenth, F. B. Spinola, Dem.; Eleventh, T. A. Merriman, Dem.; Twelfth, W. B. Cochran, Dem.; Thirteenth, A. P. Fitch, Rep. (gain); Fourteenth, W. H. Stahlnecker, Dem.; Fifteenth, Henry Bacon, Dem.; Sixteenth, J. H. Ketcham, Rep.; Seventeenth, S. T. Hopkins, Rep.; Eighteenth, H. G. Burleigh, Rep.; Nineteenth, N. Knne, Dem., gain; Twentieth, Geo. West, Rep.; Twenty-first, John H. Moffatt, Rep.; Twenty-second, A. X. Parker, Rep.; Twenty-third, J. S. Sherman, Rep.; twenty-fourth, David Wilbur, Rep., gain; Twenty-fifth, Frank Hiscock, Rep.; Twenty-sixth, Milton Delano, Rep.; Twenty-seventh, N. M. Nutting, Rep.; Twenty-eighth, T. S. Flood, Rep., gain; Twenty-ninth, Ira Davenport, Rep.; Thirtieth, C. S. Baker, Rep.; Thirty-first, J. G. Sawyer, Rep.; Thirty-second, J. M. Farquhar, Rep.; Thirty-third, J. B. Weber, Rep.; Thirty-fourth, W. G. Laidlaw, Rep.

NORTH CAROLINA.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Nov. 2.—Rowland, Democrat, is elected to Congress from the Sixth District by a heavy majority. Meager returns from the Second District, now represented by O'Hara (colored), are favorable to the election of Simmonds, Democrat.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3.—The new delegation to Congress in Pennsylvania will consist of 18 Republicans, including Brumm, Republican Greenbacker, and nine Democrats. The present delegation is composed of 20 Republicans, including Brumm, and eight Democrats. Beaver, for Governor, Republican, has a plurality of 45,217 over Black, Democrat. The full Republican State ticket is elected by about the same figures. The present House of Representatives is composed of 141 Republicans and 60 Democrats. The next House will be composed of 131 Republicans, 5 Republican Greenback Labor, 60 Democrats, 3 Independent Democrats and 1 doubtful.

RHODE ISLAND.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 2.—In the First Congressional District Spooner, Rep., is re-elected.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 2.—There is no election in the Second Congressional District. Bradley, Dem., received 5,126; Dixon, Rep., 4,849; Chase, Pro., 852; Scott, 131.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 2.—The only interest in the election in this State is centered in the independent nominations for the Legislature in Berkeley County and the contest between Elliott, Dem., and Small, Rep., for Congress in the Seventh or Black District. There are no indications yet as to the result of the local fight in Berkeley County, but all reports from the Seventh District show heavy Democratic gains over 1884, when Smalls was elected by 3,500 majority. There is a strong probability of Elliott's election, owing to his strength as a candidate, the unpopularity of Smalls and the apathy of the colored voter.

TENNESSEE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Nov. 2—11 p. m.—Returns up to this hour show Democratic gains all over the State, though a light vote has been polled. Bob Taylor, Dem., for Governor, is elected by between 20,000 and 25,000 majority. The Democrats gain one Congressman in the Tenth District. All former Democratic districts return Democrats with slightly increased majorities. The Republican legislative ticket in this (Davidson) county has been elected.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 2.—James Phelan, Dem., is elected to Congress from this, the Tenth District of Tennessee, by not less than 1,500 majority. His opponent was Zach Taylor, Rep., the present incumbent.

TEXAS.

GALVESTON, Nov. 2.—The following Democratic State ticket has been elected by large majorities: Governor, Lawrence S. Ross; Lieutenant-Governor, T. B. Wheeler; Attorney-General, Jas. S. Hogg; Comptroller, John D. McCall; Treasurer, Frank R. Lubbock; Land Commissioner, R. M. Hall; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Oscar H. Cooper. The election passed off quietly here and elsewhere in the State as far as heard from. Accurate figures on the majority for the State ticket can not be had before to-morrow, but returns thus far indicate over 100,000 majority for General Ross.

VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND, VA., Nov. 3.—All returns received to-day serve only to emphasize the defeat sustained by the Democracy of Virginia yesterday. There has been a great falling off in their votes throughout the State, and their losses in all districts have been almost phenomenal. Of ten districts in the State the Republicans carried six, the Democrats three and the Labor party one, being a net loss of five Congressmen to the Democrats. The Virginia delegation in the next Congress will be as follows: First District, T. H. B. Brown, Rep.; Second, George E. Bowden, Rep.; Third, George D. Wise, Dem.; Fourth, William E. Gaines, Rep.; Fifth, John R. Brown, Rep.; Sixth, Samuel I. Hopkins, Labor; Seventh, Charles T. O'Ferrall, Dem.; Eighth, W. H. F. Lee, Dem.; Ninth, Henry C. Bowen, Rep.; Tenth, Jacob Yost, Rep.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

PORTLAND, Nov. 2.—Very meagre returns come to-night from the election in Washington Territory. In the cities and principal towns about one-fifth of the votes were cast by women. The contest over local offices was overshadowed in the interest of fight on delegate. The Republicans are inclined to think Charles S. Voorhees, the present incumbent, a Democrat, is defeated by C. M. Bradshaw, Republican, by a small majority.

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 2—11:30 P. M.—Reports from the rural districts are swelling Rusk's plurality, and at Republican Headquarters between 18,000 and 20,000 plurality is figured for Governor Rusk. In Milwaukee, according to returns received up to 11 o'clock, Rusk had a plurality of 1,851 over Woodward, Dem., but Cochran, Labor, had a plurality of 1,246 over Rusk.

LIFE IN ITALY.

Some Peculiar Customs Prevailing Among Peasants and Country People.

An English lady, Hon. Margaret Collier, has written a book, "Our Home by the Adriatic," in which she gives some very curious accounts of peasant life in Italy. Cleanliness is not one of the virtues of Italian peasants. Miss Collier found that to ask for a bath is to create great alarm regarding the state of one's health. One old man who worked on a farm being asked if he had ever been washed, replied, after some reflection, that he believed some one had washed him when he was a small child. In the rich houses they have great hoards of linen, which enables them to hold only one washing a year. The dirty linen is stored away in cupboards until the time comes round for the annual wash. Then is seen a procession of carts, filing down to the nearest stream. The poor Italian babies have a hard time of it. Their legs are still bandaged with the fascia, like the limbs of mummies. Education is not excessively indulged in. A young lady who had received her education in a convent asked Miss Collier if it was really necessary to cross the ocean to get to England, and she did not know what an island is. To animals the lower Italians are exceedingly cruel, yet otherwise they take better care of them than of their own families, and when a doctor is consulted it is almost always regarding a sick animal. The Italian country gentleman does not hesitate to beat the female members of his family. Marriages are arranged after the French method. A young lady who came to be congratulated by Miss Collier on her approaching marriage, was asked the name of her chosen husband. "Oh! I don't know," she answered; "papa has not yet told me that."—*N. PACKER'S STRIKE.

A Collision Between the Strikers and the Police.

The Latter Unable to Cope with Twenty Thousand Men, and Illinois Infantry Ordered to the Scene.

CHICAGO, ILL., Nov. 8.—Early this morning crowds of strikers began to assemble at the Stock Yards, and it was very evident that trouble was about to ensue as the non-Union men were coming to work under the protection of the police. As the crowd increased it became more turbulent, and the sight of a "scab" inflamed them as a red rag does a mad bull. Assaults on the non-Union men now became more frequent, and the police had their hands full. One man while on his way to Fowler's packing house was intercepted while crossing a viaduct and thrown to the ground beneath, a distance of thirty feet. The man was very badly injured. After this there was a general fight between the police and the strikers, in which both received more or less damage. The police had all they could do to hold the men at bay, and telegraphed to the city for reinforcements. The members of the First and Second Regiments, Illinois National Guard, assembled at their armory this morning at seven o'clock in obedience to orders, and were transported to the stockyards. Perfect quiet reigned in the yards this morning, the tracks in the vicinity of the packing-houses being patroled by the deputy sheriffs, who kept the small crowds which congregated on the corners moving. Around the outskirts of the yards gangs of strikers stood at the entrances, and the men with their dinner-pails in their hands were deprived of their pails, and in a number of instances were severely thrashed. Pat Collins and Mike Sullivan were brought to the Armory Police Station during the morning and charged with assault. About 7 o'clock Henry Sharp and Wm. Oakley passed Thirty-eighth and Laurel streets on their way to work at Armour's. A crowd of over 200 attacked the two workingmen. Oakley was almost killed, the assailants jumping on him and kicking him in a frightful manner. But for the arrival of Officers Flannigan and McGraw, who drove the crowd back at the point of their revolvers, the two men would probably have lost their lives. All the men arrested for making these attacks were taken before a Justice and fined $50 to $100 each.

Jumper Donovan's Injuries.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Donovan, who leaped from the suspension bridge yesterday morning, passed a restless night, suffering considerable pain from the injury to his chest, sustained by striking the water diagonally. Friends who sat up with him during the night say that he slept but little, and at times moaned as if in pain. The physicians say, however, that the danger to their patient lies not so much in his injuries as to his liability to an attack of pneumonia or pleurisy, owing to his exposure in the icy water.

A Priest Attacked by a Lunatic.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8.—While saying mass this morning Rev. Father Klowter, pastor of St. Philomena's Catholic Church, was assaulted in the pulpit by an insane Bohemian named Minna Keestratrom, who walked up beside him and struck him a terrible blow back of the ear, and struck him again, knocking him down. Keestratrom will be sent to a lunatic asylum. Rev. Klowter was not seriously injured.

Qualified as a Cook.

A New York gentleman hired a cook because her recommendations were good, and moreover she asserted that she had cooked for a gentleman whose good table is celebrated. Much to the disgust of her employer, her cooking was simply horrible, so he called her into his presence and said:

"Bridget, when I hired you you told me that you were qualified as a cook, and that you had been a cook at the Boudelipper villa on the Hudson."

"And so I was, sor; I cooked the turnips for the pigs in a big boiler, sor."—Texas Siftings.

—A parrot was allowed in the witness-box of a London court the other day. Poll was not sworn, but she settled the case, which was one of disputed ownership in herself, by turning to one claimant and doing all that he commanded, while the other was snubbed.

—An old health maxim says: "Never go to bed with cold feet." This may be all right, but if your feet are cold have you got to sit up all night?—New Haven News.

DONAVAN'S JUMP

A Terrible Leap from the Suspension Bridge Into Niagara, Two Hundred Feet Below.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Lawrence Donovan, of New York, who recently jumped from the Brooklyn Bridge into East River, jumped from the new suspension bridge (a little past the center) at five minutes before seven this morning. His jump was witnessed by four or five persons. He was accompanied by Prof. Haley and Mr. Drew, a reporter of Buffalo. He made the jump successfully, a distance of one hundred and ninety feet. He went straight down, feet foremost. He came up somewhat dazed but struck out for the boat, in which were Messrs. Drew and Haley, was taken in and stimulants given him. He is not seriously injured. One rib is probably broken and hip is bruised. He said before he got out of the water that he would not jump again for $1,000,000. Afterward he said he would jump next summer for $1,000. He is at the Broezel House with a broken rib. In an interview he says: "They say the bridge is 196 feet high, and after they took me out of the water I found out that the water is lower now than it ever was, and the distance from the bridge must be 215 feet. It was a terrible jump, and I wouldn't make it again for the whole United States. It was on the Canada end of the bridge, but pretty near the middle of the river. I had on my jumping suit, the same I jumped from the Brooklyn Bridge in. I had my coat unbuttoned, so that if it bothered me in the water I could get out of it easy. I'm sorry for that now, for if the coat had not spread out in the air as I was going down I would have struck the water square and would not have broken my rib. How did I feel? Well, it's hard to tell. I closed my eyes when I jumped, but I opened them right away again, but I didn't seem to see any thing. My elbows were close to my sides and I kept my feet together. When I struck the water it seemed as though I would burst to pieces. The shock was terrible and I kept right on going down till it seemed as if I'd never stop. When I came to the surface I struck out with my arms and legs, but I was dazed, and I don't know which way I swam. The current kept carrying me down, but the boat got to me pretty soon. As soon as they pulled me in, I spit up a lot of blood and then I fainted dead away." Drs. Clark and Palmer, who examined Donavan on his arrival in the city, found him suffering from considerable excitement, several bruises and an abrasion on each of his elbows, made when he struck the water. The fourth rib on the left side was found to be separated from the breast bone, and was at once bandaged. Both physicians express the opinion that the jumper will be around in a couple of days. He says he is now ready to jump off the Genessee Falls at Rochester, where Sam Patch lost his life, and if he entirely recovers from this shock will swim the Whirlpool Rapids.

A SINGULAR ACCIDENT.

Five Men Killed or Wounded by Falling Timbers at Columbus, Ind.

COLUMBUS, IND., Nov. 7.—A terrible accident occurred here yesterday just as four trains on the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis road were due, and the platform, but a few feet from the scene of the accident, was crowded with waiting passengers, who saw it with a chill of horror. Five men were putting into place the heavy timbers of the framework to support a large water-tank. One of the guy ropes of the derrick they were using was stretched across the track, and low enough to be caught by the smokestack of the northbound train, snapping the rope and letting the derrick and the timbers fall on the heads of the five men, killing Jake Weaver, of this city, crushing the skull of Milt Robinson, of Seymour, and seriously injuring Charles Whipker, Wm. Elliott and Wm. Pennison. Robinson will die.

An Empty Honor Declined.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—President Cleveland has communicated to the authorities of Harvard College his desire that the degree of LL. D. should not be conferred upon him, and consequently it will not be. The President's reasons for declining the proposed honor are not stated, but it is known that his action has saved the Harvard authorities from the alternative of appearing to slight the President or of departing from the rule not to confer degree upon public men, which was inaugurated when General B. F. Butler was inaugurated Governor of Massachusetts.

More Earthquake Shocks.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 7.—This city experienced another severe earthquake shock Sunday afternoon, the vibrations lasting about fifteen seconds.

EARTH TREMORS.

Particularly Severe in the Southern States.

The Residents of Columbia, S. C., Leave Their Homes.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 5.—During the earthquake shock which occurred here today at twenty-six minutes past twelve o'clock, all of the public schools were in session. At the most of the white schools the scholars stood the shock pretty well, but at several of the colored schools quite a panic took place. At the Bethel Church Colored School, during the rush which was made for the door, three children were thrown down and trampled upon, and a little girl, who jumped out of the window, was seriously injured. In another of the colored schools several more of the scholars were injured by falling plastering. None of the injured, however, are fatally hurt. The disturbance to-day was very severe at Summerville, and was sharply felt throughout the State. Late telegraphic advices state that it was also felt as far south as Savannah, and as far north as Lynchburg. At Savannah there was considerable excitement, and one or two of the public schools narrowly escaped a panic. In this city no serious damage is reported beyond the cracking of a few brick walls and the tumbling down of a few chimneys. To-day's shock is variously estimated at from thirty-five to forty-five seconds duration. The direction of the wave was from south to north, and the motion was of a compound character, up and down and from side to side. Although there has been no interruption to business in consequence of to-day's disturbance, there is manifest a very general feeling of nervousness, much more so than was the case during the shocks of two weeks ago. No further shocks to 9:30 p. m. The fears felt this afternoon of a rise in the sea level on account of to-day's shock coming apparently from the ocean, have been so far without any realization.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 5.—A heavy earthquake shock was experienced in this city at 12:20 p. m., rocking buildings, knocking down loose plastering and causing people to flee from their houses to the middle of the street. The shock lasted fully forty seconds, and was accompanied by the usual loud roaring, and was second only in energy to the great quake of August 31.

CREMATED HER ALIVE.

The Atrocious Crime of a Chicago Divorced Man.

CHICAGO, Nov. 5.—Mrs. John Rushton lives with her husband at No. 206 Washington street, on the top floor. She was divorced from her former husband, Frederick Roberts, some time ago, and kept their child. Last night Roberts called at her rooms, demanded that she and his child leave with him, and when the woman refused he threw kerosene oil over her person and clothes and set fire to her. He then made his escape. The woman ran to the floor below and a neighbor succeeded in extinguishing the fire which enveloped her person, but not until she had been fearfully burned about the arms and body. Her injuries are thought to be fatal. Roberts has not been captured.

A Witness to the Haddock Assassination.

SIOUX CITY, Nov. 5.—James Jubl, a Dane, was brought from Norfolk, Neb., yesterday afternoon as a witness in the Haddock murder case. To Marshal Shanley, who went after him, he stated that he was near the scene of the murder and saw the fatal shot fired. He also describes two men who rushed past him after the shooting, going across the bridge toward the brewery, but he gives no names. The attorneys for the defense have secured a written statement which they decline to make public, but they say it is very satisfactory to their side of the case. Jubl did not object to coming to Sioux City. He was locked up. It is not claimed that he had any part in the murder.

The Late Election.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—There can not be made an accurate table statement showing the political divisions of the House of Representatives. Of the 324 members included in the list the Republicans have 153 members, the Democrats 167 and the Knights of Labor candidates four. This gives the Democrats a clear majority of twelve over the Republicans and a majority of six over all opposition. In the Rhode Island district a Republican will probably get through at the next election, so that the Republicans will have 154 members. It must be borne in mind, however, that two of the four Labor candidates elected, if not more, are Democrats, and will go into a Democratic caucus on the organization of the House of Representatives.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—A Chicago dispatch says that the Barbed Wire Manufacturers' Association has now gained control of all the factories, and has ordered an advance of $2.50 per ton for wire on the 1st of January, in addition to $5 per ton increase just gone into effect.

DYNAMITE GUN CRUISER.

The New and Novel Vessel for Uncle Sam's Navy.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Charles A. Cramp came here from Philadelphia yesterday morning, and it is stated that he made an agreement with the Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company by which his firm will accept the contract offered by Secretary Whitney for building the dynamite gun cruiser that Congress authorized him to contract for last winter. The vessel is to make twenty knots an hour and to be manned with three dynamite guns capable of throwing a 200 pound shell at least a mile once every two minutes. It is to cost not more than $350,000. Should the vessel fail to meet these requirements when completed the contractors are to refund the $350,000 expended on it by the Government. Bonds in that amount must be filed with Secretary Whitney by the contractors before work is begun.

Mangus Tries to Kill Himself Rather Than Go to Florida.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 4.—Mangus, head chief of the Chiracahua Apaches, and thirteen bucks and squaws, passed through here under guard to-day enroute to Fort Marion, Fla. While the party were going through Colorado, Mangus jumped through the car window and ran some distance before he was recaptured. Then he obtained a knife and stabbed himself in half a dozen places, inflicting serious wounds. This morning he attacked his interpreter, striking the man about the head with the shackles on his wrists. During the subsequent uproar the train started, carrying off all the party except the interpreter, who was left behind and will follow to-night.

An effort will probably be made to-morrow to secure his release on bail.

Court-house with All Records Destroyed.

LANCASTER, N. H., Nov. 4.—The court-house, containing the county offices, was burned this morning. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is thought to have been caused by an explosion of gas, immediately after which flames burst from the front door, windows and roof. All records and papers were burned. Loss on the building about $20,000; insurance, $10,000.

Labor to Organize for 1888.

A Canadian "Tourist" Arrested.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—A Montreal special says: John F. Hoke, the Peoria embezzling bank cashier, has been arrested here by a Chicago detective. He was traveling under the alias of George Hanna. THE vote cast for Congressman in this District on the 2d inst. is a solemn warning to the Democracy, and so long as the apathy which has overtaken the party prevails, and is strengthened by the discordant elements that infest the cities of Newport and Covington, it can expect no better results than that of the recent Congressional election, and it is enough to make the cold chills of despair take possession of a Boone county Democrat to contemplate the bare majority received by Mr. Carlisle, when Boone alone has a clear Democratic majority of 1,800 votes, the larger portion of whom remained away from the polls on Tuesday of last week, and imperiled the re-election of a man who is an acknowledged leader among the galxy of Democratic statesmen.

When Mr. Carlisle spoke in Burlington on the first Monday in last October, the Democratic voters to the number of at least a thousand rallied to hear him, and were well pleased with his utterances on that occasion, but when election day rolled around only 567 are found at the polls casting their ballots for him. For this small vote there is no excuse except that over-confidence of the people in Mr. Carlisle's election, relying on the strength of the party rather than its votes, to carry him through, and thus materially assisting in bringing upon the party in this district the humiliation of a tremendous reduction of a majority at the polls, which, owing to its enormity, is but little better than a defeat. Party pride should have been sufficient to induce the Democrats of this county to turn out and endorse their candidate, and not allow it to be heralded throughout the country that he narrowly escaped defeat by a man never heard of in the district outside of Covington and Newport.

Who are responsible for the great reduction of Mr. Carlisle's legitimate majority? Positively nobody but the Democrats, of whom at least 1,500 are voters in this county. Democrats of Boone, this lethargy will culminate in disaster if not shaken off. Be alive to the interest of your party, and when an important election is to be held as that through which we have just passed, be found at the polls casting your votes.

Outside of a few Democrats "for office only," in Covington and Newport, there is practically no opposition to Mr. Carlisle in his party in this district. These Democrats "for office only" imagine themselves of more importance than the party, and finding that they could not manipulate the entire machine in the district, set on foot, assisted and encouraged a scheme to defeat, if possible a man who excells them in ability and statesmanship as the noon-day sun excells in brilliancy the dimest star that shines by night. This element combined with other small opposition, made a still hunt in Covington and Newport, and with the medium through which the district should have been warned of the danger threatening the party, as dumb as an oyster, coupled with the apathy on the part of the country vote, is the entire cause of the trouble.

Many of the voters of this county regret that they did not go to the polls and vote, but it is now too late to make amends. But it is not too late for each and every voter in Boone County to pledge himself that he will never again be indifferent about so important a matter. Let this be a lesson to you and one by which you will profit in the future.

THE Cincinnati Enquirer says: "In our Washington correspondence an unnamed interviewer undertakes to say that Mr. Carlisle does not desire the Speakership of the Fiftieth Congress. This paper is enabled to make a similar statement. Mr. Carlisle would prefere to be on the floor, where his rarely equaled powers of debate could have full play. But nevertheless, his preference in this matter will not be considered unless, in the course of events, it seems proper to Providence and the people to elevate him to still higher honors. He will unquestionably be re-elected Speaker for the simple reason that both part[illegible] his ability and

The Congressional election in [illegible] resulted as follows:

First District—Stone, elected by [illegible] majority over Turner,—both Democrats.

Second District—[illegible], Democrat, elected over Jolly, Republican.

Third District—Hunter, Republican, elected over Rhea, Democrat.

Fourth District—Montgomery, Democrat, elected over Belden, Republican.

Fifth District—Caruth, Democrat, elected over Wilson, Republican.

Sixth District—Carlisle, Democrat, elected over Thobe, Labor.

Seventh District—Breckinridge, no opposition, and Democrat.

Eighth District—McCreary, Democrat, over Todd, Republican.

Ninth District—Thomas, Republican over Botts, Democrat.

Tenth District—Taulbee, Democrat, over Hurst, Republican.

Eleventh District—Finley, Republican, over Botts, Democrat.

At present the Kentucky delegation stands ten Democrats to one Republican. In the Fiftieth Congress the delegation will stand seven Democrats to three Republicans, a gain of two members for the Republicans.

Though the returns from most of the States indicate a reaction against the party in power, the extent of this reaction does not indicate anything approaching a political catastrophe.

Invariably the elections intervening between our Presidential contests show a certain amount of distrust of the party in power. This party just now is our own. Formerly these so-called "off years" put new hope, new faith and new courage into the Democratic party, and forced it on to defeat in the National contest. Even during the war, popular dissatisfaction manifested itself in Democratic gains, and after the war the Democratic party on these occasions repeatedly obtained control of the House. In these off-years the spoils of victory seemed to belong to the opposition.—Courier Journal.

THE Louisville Times remarks that Col. Billy Breckinridge is the only candidate for congress in Kentucky who had no opposition for either nomination or election; that he was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, and luck will abide with him the rest of his days. Such is the reward of a life of industry and painstaking toil. Col. Breckinridge, blessed with a pregnant mind has been a steady worker and a persistent student all his life, and what success he has attained, and may attain, should be attributed not only to the prestige of his name but to the full measures of courageous toil that has filled his busy days.

There is hope of better things in the next House at Washington. If the Democrats organize the House there will be better management; it cannot be worse. A new chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and another leader of the party on the floor of the House cannot fail to be an improvement. No man elected to the next House would better fill the requirements than Sam Randall.

There is also ground to hope that the next House will be in more complete accord with the President.—Commonwealth.

A DISPATCH to the Louisville Courier-Journal says:

"Thobe, Republican candidate against Speaker Carlisle for Congress in the Sixth Kentucky district, announces his intention to contest the election of Mr. Carlisle. He claims that after the contest became very close the returns in the back counties were "doctored;" also that his representatives sent to watch the official count were given no consideration whatever, and in one instance were threatened with bodily injury."

So far as either or all of the above charges are intended to apply to Boone county, they are base lies.

WHEN Nodler was appointed postmaster for Covington a holy howl was raised because Mr. Carlisle did not have some one of his political friends appointed; and when Judges Arthur, Menzies, and Mayor Athey appointed Judge O'Hara and others water commissioners they are condemned because they appointed their political friends. Turn your eyes towards Covington if you want to see consistency—in a horn.

CONSIDERING the fact that there are thousands of disappointed applicants for office in this county, many of whom are only awaiting an opportunity to turn upon the administration, the Democratic party comes out of the recent elections in as good condition as could have been expected.

SOME say that Mr. Carlisle's recent political experience will take some of the conceit out of him. He now has nor never had any in him.

The Lexington Gazette says Mr. W. J. Loughridge bought 20,000 pounds of hemp from the Ward Brothers, for which he paid $5.50 per 112 pounds.

According to the Flemingsburg Times Thos. S. Collins, of that county, reports the astonishing yield of 192 flour barrels of potatoes from 6½ bushels of seed. Counting the barrels at 3 bushels it would make 576 bushels, or about 88½ bushels to one bushel of seed.

"The Danville Advocate says: A number of hempgrowers have begun to spread their hemp. A rough calculation shows that not less than 1,000 acres of hemp were grown in Boyle this year. The crop at this stage is in excellent condition, and it is thought the yield will be unusually large.

The Lexington Press says: We are glad to see our farmer friends awake at last to the great industry of saving clover seed. A few years since such a thing as home grown clover seed was never thought of, and our farmers sent yearly thousands of dollars North for seed that was not near as good as we are now saving at home, in fact our seed commands from 50 to $1 per bushel more on the market, and we do not have the weed seed of the North scattered broadcast over our land. This year we have a very abundant crop of seed and of a very superior quality. Seed is being offered daily to our dealers at prices ranging from $4 to $4.50.

Legislature of West Virginia Democratic on joint ballot.

The Republican majority in Ohio, is cut down to about 11,000.

The official count in the Seventh Ohio Congress district gives Campbell, Dem., three majority.

The Legislature of California is conceded to be Demоcratic on joint ballot by six majority. This insures the gain of a Democratic United States Senator.

Official returns show Robertson's (Rep.) plurality for Lieutenant Governor of Indiana to be 3,647. The Legislature on joint ballot will stand Democrats 76, Republicans 74.

A West Virginia man reports having seen a snake forty feet long trying to swallow a sheep. Our information is that Prohibition does not prevail in West Virginia.—Georgetown Times.

Democratic State committees have been called to meet at Frankfort Tuesday, Nov. 23d, to select a time and place for holding a convention to nominate candidates for Governor and other State officers.

Henry Clay is accredited with having said that if there was any office under the government that could not be filled by one man as well as another, that office should be abolished. We are somewhat of that opinion ourselves. Turn the rascals out.—Todd Co. Progress.

The Courier-Journal is mad about the vote in Louisville, but the C-J., is responsible for it. Its abuse of Willis and his friends was brutal and indecent. It drove many of them from the Democratic party. If it does not change its course there will be an irrepairable breach in the Fifth district, which means the election of a Republican two years hence.—Owensboro Messenger.

The Local Option question is over, and excepting such persons as were having "a good time," in one way or other, all are glad of it. It was a scene of excitement, in which bands of music shrieked along the streets, banners flitted in the breeze, and ribbons blue and ribbons red flashed continually before the eyes. Much whisky was drank, which stimulated independent voters in new shoes, new pants, new shirt, or some similar et cetera—to "vote his principles." As the liquid went down the animal spirits went up. The streets were thronged. Excited men, women and children gathered in throngs. Now the blue ribbon was waved in triumph, and now again the red, until the latter—which was the emblem of the whisky party, triumphed by 192 majority. Good nature prevailed, and aside from headaches with some, and heartaches with others, the community is in statu quo.—Paris Kentuckian.

The Bard, the crack three-year-old thoroughbred of the season has won this year $41,705 in stakes and purses. He started sixteen times, won ten races, was second five times, and unplaced but once—that race being run on the turf.

The tobacco growers of Bourbon in convention assembled have fixed Lexington the place and Tuesday, December 7, as the time for a general convention to be held for the purpose of devising ways and means to enhance the value of burley in Kentucky.

Beattyville Enterprise says: A man of Jackson county, says he is 116 years old; was born in North Carolina; he works every day; his sight is good. He is now living with his third wife, who is sixty-five years old. They support themselves on a little farm by manual labor.

The new revenue law requires the owners of the land who do not reside in the county in which it lies to file a written description of each tract with the County Clerk, and the failure to do so subjects the owner to a fine of not less than $20 and not more than $100 for each tract, and $1 for each $100 of the value of the land.

The tobacco barn of T. M. Curd & Sons, two miles from town, on the Cane Run pike, with 1,600 pounds of tobacco, and farming implement, were destroyed by fire Tuesday night. It is thought to have been set on fire, but by whom is not known. The insurance on building is $800, on tobacco $650, and farming implements $150.—Harrodsburg Democrat.

Col. R. N. White, who has been in Jackson and Rockcastle during the last few days on business, returned home last Thursday. He brought with him a sample of apples from a tree in Rockcastle which are the second growth for this year. The tree has blossoms at present, and, if it were not for the cold weather would doubtless produce a third crop.—Richmond Herald.

James Jenkins has been convicted, by the Franklin Circuit Court, of the murder of Ed Doly, at Peak's Mill, in that county, three years ago last July, and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. He has had three trials, the first resulting in a hung jury, the second in a conviction and sentence of two years to the penitentiary. The Court of Appeals reversed that decision.

The great race horse Asteroid, son of Lexington, died of colic at Woodburn Stock Farm Monday night. He was foaled in 1861, and was therefore 25 years old. In his time he was a great racer, having won every race in which he started, and never having been beaten, except in one heat. He started fourteen times and won a vast amount of money for his runner, Mr. Robert A. Alexander.—Midway Clipper.

A couple of gentlemen went to a spiritualist the other night and agreed to pay $2 if they could converse with a departed friend they could recognize. One called for the spirit of his sister Nellie, and it came and spoke to him. The other called for his Uncle John, and was astonished at hearing his relative speak to him in the darkened room. But the strangest part of the whole business is that No. 1 never had a sister, and No. 2's Uncle John is not dead. They enjoyed the seance hugely.—Exchange.

Mr. A. G. Winston is erecting a large barn on his (the Collins) farm adjoining town. J. W. Kirkpatrick's force of mechanics are doing the work.

Mrs. Harriet Kirtley has rented a portion of Miss Mary A. Thompson's residence in Burlington, and she and her daughters are now citizens of our town.

Rev. E. K. Bell, of the First English Lutheran church of Cincinnati, is assisting Rev. W. H. Keller in a protracted meeting at Hebron church, this week.

There is considerable complaint of horses being taken and ridden at night. Some of these nights a load of shot will find its way into some guilty fellow's back.

The Limaburg mill was unable to do any grinding yesterday on account of a disabled pump. The energetic proprietors will soon have broken machinery repaired.

Jack Frost did his first artist work of the fall last Sunday night, and from the numerous designs displayed on the windows it seems he has lost none of his old time talent.

Robert Rice, son of Scott Rice, and Bertha Rice, daughter of Erastus Rice, all of Bellevue neighborhood, were married last Wednesday. May they enjoy a long and happy life.

The churches in this county are enjoying a remarkable season of prosperity. Nearly every denomination has had its membership largely increased as the result of recent revival meetings.

We hear it said that the Baptists will commence a protracted meeting in Burlington as soon as the Methodists close. The Presbyterians have been making their calculations on doing the same.

Some of the people around Hamilton think Gorden, the school teacher, was murdered on the river at that place. The night of the murder they heard noises which to them is now very suspicious.

The school in Morgan Academy seems to be progressing nicely and without complaint from the patrons. The attendance is up in the sixties, and will in all probability go higher now that the busy season is over.

The delegates from Carroll county who attended the Union Sunday-school Institute at Walton all came home feeling fully repaid for their time and expense and advise others to attend the next Institute. Swetnam & Scott's new livery stable in Covington is the most complete stable in that city. It is commodious and perfect in all its appointments, and while they were providing for the comfort of the horse they did not forget to arrange for the accommodation of its patrons and for the ladies they furnished a cozy waiting room in which they can make themselves as comfortable as at home; besides this department is strictly private and "for ladies only."

The entertainment given in the Court-house last Friday evening was not largely attended, and owing to the very poor acoustic properties of the Court room the vocalists could not do themselves justice. Professor Levassor is certainly a very fine performer on the piano, and on that occasion acquitted himself with great credit. After the concert an oyster supper was enjoyed by quite a large crowd. We are sorry that the entertainment did not meet with as much more liberal patronage.

The convention of the Sunday-school Union of this, the 15th district at Walton, was a grand affair, and a good attendance was had daily. Rev. J. N. He is loud in the praise of citizens at Walton for the very kind hospitality extended all visitors. Rev. Current's field of labor for this year embraces the territory surrounding Walton, Mt. Zion and Florence, and his pastorship is giving the greatest satisfaction.—Warsaw Independent.

By a private letter from Dr. J. G. Furnish, who is now in New York, to one of his friends in Burlington, we learn that he has had a very pleasant journey, taking in the cities of Richmond, Va., where he visited everything of any note; Washington City, where he beheld many things of interest, and Baltimore, which likewise presented a retinue of objects that were both entertaining and instructive. From the tone of the Doctor's epistle we believe we are justified in the assertion that he will remain away from Burlington no longer than it is absolutely necessary for him to accomplish that for which he went to New York.
